UNCLE JAKE DIDN'T AGREE.

The Old Man Upheld His Reputation For Being Contrary.

"Uncle Jake" was one of the characters of Bainbury. He was as obstinate as a post—when he wanted to be—and as contrary as a bundle of sticks. One of his neighbors came into his yard one day and said: "Uncle Jake, I'd like to borrow your wagon this morning. Mine is having a spring mended."

"You'll have to speak louder," rejoined Uncle Jake. "I don't hear very well, and I don't like to lend my wagon anyhow."

The old man was an expert maker of ax handles—an occupation in which there is more art than the uninitiated would suppose—and these handles he left at the village store to be sold on commission. One snowy day, as Uncle Jake came stumping up the steps of the store, another old fellow who was known as Uncle Horace remarked to the men lounging about the stove: "I'll treat the crowd if I don't make Uncle Jake agree to the first thing I say to him when he comes in."

"Don't be rash, Uncle Horace," called out the storekeeper. "That never happened yet, and it isn't likely to."

But Uncle Horace merely grinned and picked up one of Uncle Jake's ax handles. The door opened, and in came Uncle Jake.

"Jake," said Uncle Horace, running his fingers up and down the smooth wood, "this is a mighty good ax handle."

"No, it ain't," replied Uncle Jake at once. "I can make good handles, but that one you've got is the kind people want. They don't know no better."

And Uncle Horace treated the company to sardines, crackers and cheese—Youth's Companion.

SMALL SAVINGS.

A Lecture on Economy That Mark Hanna Delivered to Dingley.

Mark Hanna did many things in a large way. Nevertheless he was not averse to paying his serious attention to little things on occasion. Senator Hanna, in a discussion in Washington before the committee on Spending Representatives' Expenses, of the tariff law—just enacted—said that Hanna walked in and took a seat beside him. He was accompanied and each one of them made separate entries. Dingley said: "I don't know, Hanna with a box."

The conversation led along the lines of business. Reports, they agreed, indicated that every class of business and industry was prospering. "Every one," said Hanna, "seems to be making good money."

Dingley protested. He knew of at least one man who wasn't—himself.

"It's very simple, Dingley, very," replied Hanna. "You pay your carriage with a nickel, the full hundred cents on the dollar. You may have noticed that I paid my fare with a ticket. I buy

Just 20 per cent for myself. That's the secret, Dingley. That's the thing you've got to learn—how to save the 20 per cent for yourself. That's your trouble, Dingley; you don't save when you have the opportunity. A lot more people would be rich if they would only learn how to put that extra 20 per cent on the credit instead of the debit side of their accounts."—New York World.

Tree That Gives Light.

Among freaks of nature in trees there stands conspicuous one known as the Ashlar star tree. It is enormously tall, growing to a height of from sixty feet to eighty feet, while from the ground up to a distance of about forty feet the trunk is perfectly bare. From that point there spring a number of tangled limbs, which shoot out clusters of long, pointed leaves, and it is these, grouped together, that emit at night a clear, phosphorescent light. This gives the tree a spectral appearance and is very deceiving to travelers, who frequently mistake the glow for an illuminated window of a house. The light is not brilliant, but is of sufficient strength to allow of a newspaper being read by it. It does not flicker, but glows steadily from sunset to daybreak.

On the Slopes of Vesuvius.

Despite the danger to which they are exposed from 80,000 to 100,000 people live upon the slopes of Vesuvius, besides the 200,000 inhabitants crowded into Naples. The reason is that the fertility of the soil is perennial, the soil only occasional. The volcanic ejecta are rich in alumina, silica, magnesia, lime, potash and iron, which by their decomposition go to make splendid land. Some of the best vines in Italy grow on the skirts of Vesuvius. If the volcano were away not one-tenth of the many cultivators could subsist in the same area.

Using the Cake.

For the first time Ethel chanced to see her father preparing to shove something into the kitchen, she exclaimed: "Oh, mamma, guess what papa is doing?"

"I don't know, dear. What is he doing?"

"He's making a cake out of his face," replied Ethel. "He's putting the lemon in it now."—Chicago News.

Hopeful.

Her Legal Adviser—Madam, you have had three husbands, and even one of them either went crazy or turned out to be worthless. Yet you are thinking of marrying again? Fair?—Yes, sir. I want a safe and sound fourth.—Chicago Tribune.

"On the life about which least—"

—he said is the one that says the most."

Student—I told you last night to wake me at 7 this morning. Why the dickens didn't you do so? Landlady—Well, sir, at 7 o'clock you hadn't come home.—Chicago Tribune.

BABIES UNDER THE SPOUT.

In Simla They Water the Youngsters to Keep Them Quiet.

The native mothers in the neighborhood of Simla, in India, have a curious practice of dipping their babies' heads under a spout of water in order to send the youngsters to sleep and to keep them quiet. When a new carriage was made some years ago in the locality mentioned there was a bathing place, whose rows of such children might be seen in a grove close to the road.

The water of a hill spring was so adjusted as to furnish a series of little spouts, such about the thickness of one's little finger. Opposite each spout was a kind of earth pillow and a little trough to carry away the water. Each child was so laid that one of the water spouts played on the top of its head, and the water then ran off into the trough.

An English official testifies that the process was most successful. There never were such quiet and untroublesome babies as those under the spouts. The people were unanimous in asserting that the water did the children no harm, but that, on the contrary, it benefited and invigorated them. In fact, they seemed to think that a child not subjected to this process must grow up soft brained and of little account.—Harper's Weekly.

ORIGIN OF CINDERELLA.

The Dainty Footed Damsel Who Became a King's Wife.

It has been said: "Not one girl in a thousand knows the origin of the legend of her childhood, Cinderella."

Her real name was Rhodope, and she was a beautiful Egyptian maiden who lived 670 years before the common era and during the reign of one of the twelve kings of Egypt. One day Rhodope ventured to bathe in a clear stream near her home, leaving her shoes, which were very small, lying on a bank. An eagle, passing above, caught sight of the little sandals and, mistaking them for a toothsome tidbit, pounced down and carried off one in his beak.

The bird unwittingly played the part of fairy godmother, for, flying over Memphis, where the king was dispensing justice, it let the shoe fall directly at the king's feet. Its size, beauty and distinctness immediately attracted the royal eye, and the king determined to know the wearer of so charming a shoe.

Messengers were sent through all the kingdom in search of the foot that it would fit. Rhodope was finally discovered, the shoe passed on her foot, and she was carried in triumph to Memphis, where she became the queen of King Psammethicus.
