W. C. T. U. COLUMN.

A continuation of Gov. Hadley's article on the liquor question from last week's issue:

The Colossal Power of the Traffic—its ability to injure men and parties—is a fifth reason why it still exists. It possesses gigantic wealth, owns vast resources of property and capital, more than two thousand million of dollars,—and touches the financial interests of many men in every section of the country. Grown rich and endowed with colossal and irresponsible power, it holds an impudent and arrogant lordship, demands the reins of government, and does as it wills with the authority of great cities. Its every instinct is predatory and destructive. It intimidates and corrupts officials elected by the people to enforce the laws of municipalities and commonwealths, and overrides the law when it wills. An abbot of unreason, a lord of misrule, it takes its ease and riots at pleasure. There is no law made for its regulation or control that it respects; no ordinance it does not infract; no constitutional provision, however solemn or sacred, that it does not trample upon; no day so holy that it does not desecrate it. It has no religion but the greed of gain; no patriotism, no love, that the lust of gold does not corrupt; no pity that any one does not strangle. It knows richer streams of profit than obedience to the law can bring it. The king of anarchy, it keeps its forces organized and equipped, ready as a cannon ball. All act together—every brewer, every distiller, every saloon-keeper, and the manager of every associate evil. Politicians in and out of office fear it,—those who make platforms, and those who are ambitious. Bold and unscrupulous, it swaxes, wheedles, and cajoles; it coerces, bullies, and intimidates, by parade of its members and its power, and if necessary, corrupts and bribes, until licensing boards and city officials yield to its demands. Then, once in the saddle, every restriction laid upon it becomes meaningless and impotent. The most sacred holidays are openly desecrated. Forbidden hours are unobserved. Windows are darkened with screens. Liquors are sold to minors. Wine-rooms are operated, and gambling is permitted. Punishment rarely if ever follows. Licenses are not revoked. Existing licenses are renewed, and the monopoly is continued. All that has been provided for in advance. When arrests are made and convictions found, the guilty perjure themselves when necessary in their applications for renewal of licenses. Licensing boards make no investigations, and the renewal is granted.

Because of its power to injure them in business, in profession, and in politics, men who hate it at heart bow before it, worship at its unholy shrine, and weakly do its bidding. For this reason it continues to exist. But it will not always be so. I have an imperturbable faith that its domination in this land is to end; that its death is as certain as the evolution of the race, as inevitable as the purposes of the Almighty. Nobody is stronger than everybody. No combination of brewers, distillers, saloon-keepers, and politicians can prevail over the people, once the people are welded by the indignation of insult. An institution founded upon human wrong can not abide. It may stand for awhile, but in the end it will go by the board. You may lay its foundation ever so deep and so wide, you may build it, and hedge it about and entrench it with wealth and power, and pile it high as the Himalayas; but if it rests upon iniquity, the heart of a woman or the prize of a child will beat it down. Arrogant and powerful as it is, its days are numbered. We ourselves shall be privileged to see the dawn of the dynamic hour when its power shall be broken. A force is gathering that will find a way to overthrow it, or will make one.—make one though party ties be rent and party affiliations be surrendered. (To be concluded in next issue.)
