The body of Russell Blackman, a member of the Fisher Engineering Co. of Portland, who lost his life at the time of the wreck of the Mimi, was found a short distance south of Cape Meares. It is anticipated that sometime in the near future the train schedule between Tillamook and Portland will be changed so as to allow Portland bound trains to leave Tillamook at 8 a. m. instead of at 7 a. m. If this is done Harris & Roger will endeavor to have the mail route schedule between Tillamook and Cloverdale changed so that the stage will leave Cloverdale at about 5 a. m., giving residents in the south part of the county time to make connections with the morning train here.

As we go to press the damage suit, Frank Long, Sr. administrator of the estate of William Campbell, deceased, vs. P. R. & N. Ry. Co., is in the hands of the jury. This case was brought about through the death of Wm. Campbell who was killed, by being run over by a train, at Wheeler, last fall. The witnesses for the railway Co. testified that the train was running only 6 miles an hour while going through Wheeler and that every man was in his place and did everything possible to avert the accident. The witnesses for the plaintiff, three in all, claim that the train was running from 15 to 20 miles an hour and that there was not a man in sight to keep watch over affairs when the train struck Campbell. The plaintiffs allege gross negligence.

“Such shipments mean Studebaker has the confidence of the farmer”

Every year over one hundred thousand horse-driven vehicles are sold by Studebaker. Over a million Studebaker vehicles are always in use. Stop and think what that means.

This enormous output means that Farmers—the men who know—depend upon Studebaker wagons to do their work.

And a Studebaker wagon never fails. It is always ready to do a big day's work—and to keep on doing it. There are thousands of Studebaker wagons that have been in service from 20 to 40 years.

A Studebaker wagon is a real business asset. Wheels, body, frame, axles and running gear have been tested and retested by experts. You can buy cheaper wagons but they're not Studebakers, nor will they last like Studebaker wagons.

Whether in city, town or country, for business or pleasure, there is a Studebaker vehicle to meet your requirements. Farm wagons, trucks, contractors' wagons, buggies, surreys, runabouts, pony carriages, business and delivery wagons—each the best of its kind. Studebaker harness also, of every description.

DAIRY NOTES.

Milk Secretion.

From Western Farmer.

Average milk consists of 87 per cent water and 13 per cent solids, of which fat constitutes 4 per cent, sugar 5 per cent and ash 6 per cent. If you do not feed all these in you can't milk them out.

The udder is a secretory gland—or two glands. It consists of a mass of glandular cells, empty spaces, and milk cisterns. It is not much different in appearance than lung tissue. The ordinary udder can not hold much milk—just a trifle. So when you talk of a cow "holding up her milk" you are mistaken. You have drawn all her udder contains and that's all you can get until she secretes more. So she has ceased to manufacture, or more properly has not begun, instead of "holding up" her milk in the udder. It is doubtful if a cow can "hold up" milk that is already secreted. It flows to the milk cisterns and all you have to do is apply the muscular movements that get it.

Milk secretion is effected by a great many things. Excitement, fatigue, annoyance, etc., somehow stop the secretion of milk in some cows. Some begin secretion long before the milker gets ready for it and if they are easy milkers they leak a great part of it. Some cows will not "give down" to a strange milker; some seem to be little affected by anything.

Regularity in milking—that is, having a fixed time every day—has much to do with milk secretion. The cows used to being milked at a certain time and when that time comes secretion begins. If the milker is not ready they suffer inconvenience from the pressure in their udders. But do not think that a cow can hold a pail of milk in her udder. A greater part of the "milk" is secreted after the milker begins work.

There must be a good flow of blood to the udder to secrete large quantities and this blood supply is indicated by the size of the milk veins on the belly.

The Limit.

Not long ago we made some very vigorous statements concerning the way some cowkeepers take care of the cream separator. It was quoted and commented favorably on by the best dairy paper. Though that was hot shot at filthiness it was none too strong.

In reporting conditions in a certain western state (we charitably refrain from naming it) a dairy inspector says this: "I have seen cream separators kept in the cow barn and on which chickens roost. One man, notwithstanding the presence of a visitor, ran the milk through the separator, poured in cold water and then pulled off a sock and used it for a wash rag."

That's what we call the limit. There may be worse conditions on dairy farms but we don't want to hear of them. This is evidence enough that the cities have a right to know that the dairy products they consume are clean and healthful.

Everywhere the farmers are opposing the enactment and enforcement of inspection laws. They feel insulted because their product must pass inspection.

There's just this to say about it. Just as long as there is a single filthy producer like those cited above then there's every justification for the laws and their strict enforcement. The clean and decent dairymen can have nothing to fear from inspection. They should desire that their goods do not receive a bad name because others are filthy.

Those who let the separator go without washing, or let chickens roost upon it, or use a sock for a wash rag should be forced by law to quit dairying or clean up.

The evidence is so strong that it can no longer be disputed.

The separator should be rinsed in warm water, then washed with a clean rag or brush in hot water, then scalded out with boiling water every time used. It should be kept covered so dirt can't get at the receiving can. It should be kept in a clean place. If not, in the name of decency quit using it.

Portland, April 30—To stimulate public sentiment against forest destruction and at the same time promote sanitation, the state authorities of Idaho, Washington and Oregon have endorsed a unique project of the Western Forestry & Conservation Association to supply 300,000 public school children with a folding cup puzzle which shows a way to avoid public drinking cups and also teaches many lessons about the forest fire evil. A square piece of paper, printed on both sides with a jumble of broken text and portions of pictures in bright colors, when folded on dotted lines presents, in a series of four consecutive completed pictures, the growth of a forest fire from carelessness with a catch to a final scene of destruction. At the same time are developed a series of rules and precautions, while one side of the completed cup suggests learning to fold it out of any paper anywhere. These will soon be distributed in immense quantities through the public schools.
