Tillamook Boy Writes From the Orient.

Joseph Atkinson One of Uncle Sam's Sailor Boys, Sends Interesting Letter From China to His Mother Here.

U. S. S. Cincinnati, Nanking, China, Aug. 8, '13.

Dear Mother: Will try and write a few lines tonight. We have been here nearly a week now and don't know when we will leave we went up to Kinkiang, about 300 miles from here, with supplies for the Helena but got there too late to see any fighting.

They are expecting an attack on Nanking in a few days but it will be our luck to leave before it happens.

We have been getting liberty here from 1 p. m. to 7 p. m. I was out to Ming Tombs and took several pictures there, also a few of the town.

It is a great place for old walls. There is one around the entire city and several inside the large wall. The city wall is about 60 feet thick and about 30 feet high and is built of large sun dried brick. It must have taken a long time and a lot of labor to build it as it is over 20 miles long.

There has been some hard fighting in Shanghai since we left there and it is now in the hands of the Rebels.

It was thought at first the Japs were supplying the Rebels with ammunition but they have found out differently. The rebels have lost nearly every place except Shanghai and Woosung.

There was some fighting at Chink Kiang about 50 miles below here, and the reports are that the Rebels fired on one of our gun boats but don't think there is anything to it.

This trip has been the downfall of the Cincinnati. The day we left we ran into the Collier when trying to go along side to coal, and bent two five inch guns and a six pounder. The second day up the river one of the pumps sprang a leak and used up all the fresh water before they found the trouble, so we had to anchor all that day until they could make more water and fix the pump. Next day the pumps wouldn't work and they couldn't get water in the boilers and burned one of them so it can't be used any more.

Yesterday they lighted fires under three boilers to shift anchorage and two of them leaked so they had to pull the fires.

There was a board of survey on here Monday looking over things but we don't know yet what their verdict will be but expect to go to Olongapo navy yard for repairs.

I sent you a bunch of pictures a few days ago and am sending another one now. I am putting most of my small ones in an album and will send it when I get it filled.

I suppose everybody is busy with their hay there by now, if they have not finished. This fine weather makes me feel like getting out in the woods or somewhere.

There is some fine farm land along the river here. The Yangtze Valley is claimed to be the most fertile valley in the world but the river overflows every summer and floods the whole country. The Chinks have dikes built in some places and raise fine crops. Corn is their main crop here, besides rice. They raise quite a few water-melons but they are not good like they are in the states. None of the fruit or vegetables are very good out here. Well I can't think of any more tonight. Write soon. Joe.

School Books

All new school books have arrived, and we are now ready to make the changes according to the demands of the text commission. We also have a large and complete line of school supplies at exceeding low prices, better values than ever before.

Auto Party Enjoys Our Good Roads.

Interesting Article by Marguerite E. Egbert of Portland, who Enjoys A Trip With Friends Through The County.

From Sunday's Oregonian:

Why should we Portlanders crave the adventures of transcontinental motoring, when we have within easy reach a trip which holds excitement even to the extent of being held up while a stump is blasted from the roadside? The trip to which I refer is that beautiful little mountainous route from Portland to the thriving little city of Tillamook.

We left Portland bright and early in our Overland, which we think, as every motorist thinks of his car, is the only car manufactured. The day was perfect for such a trip, for it was cool and the sky was overcast with light clouds. We were well prepared for whatever obstacle might confront us. We had a complete outfit for cooking, so we did not need to worry about making time. Those in the party were Mr. and Mrs. P. K. Egbert, myself and Clifford Pegg.

Over the Fulton Hill and the smooth roads of Multnomah County we sped along at a good rate until we came to the county line. We needed no signboards to tell us that we had entered Washington County. The difference in the road was quite enough evidence. The only thing which saved us from a disagreeable trip through Washington County was the rain which had fallen the day before and partially laid the dust.

Scenery is Beautiful.

From Newberg to McMinnville was passed through one of the rich farming districts of the fertile Willamette Valley. Shortly after leaving Willamina, we came to the mountains, and what mountains and what scenery! First we would climb up a steep grade and then, suddenly, go down again. We would ride along a wooded canyon just above a clear, rushing, stony mountain stream, then we would go up, up, up until we were many feet above it. We traveled along a road winding up and down through the Grand Ronde reservation.

The roads were good until we reached the mountainous region and there we found several miles of old plank and corduroy road. During this portion of our journey, we were kept busy hanging onto our seats, which we were unable to occupy all of the time. After passing over such road we all felt ready to eat our lunch. We stopped at a beautiful open spot in the trees and built a fire and prepared our noonday meal.

The highest point in the mountain is just this side of Dolph. The view from this point is unsurpassable. The summits of the mountains, with which we were on a level, are covered with giant trees and heavy undergrowth.

Toll Charged on Good Road.

At Dolph we paid toll for passing over the only three miles of really good road we experienced after we had entered the mountains. We could as readily recognize Tillamook County by its good roads as we could Washington by its bad roads. Just beyond Dolph there has been a great improvement in the road in the last two years. Many of the steep grades have been taken down, among these the famous Dolph hill, which was formerly a 33 per cent grade. Then, too, the road has been widened so that two vehicles can easily pass at any point. The people of Tillamook County surely deserve much credit for their fine roads, for their county is not an easy one in which to
