WHEELER NEWS.

From Reporter:

J. T. Donovan has let a contract for the excavation of his lot to the Hart Bro's Wednesday. They will begin work at once in order to hasten the construction of the building at the earliest possible moment.

J. A. Jensen installed an electric dynamo in his shingle mill this week to furnish light for his plant during the coming winter months when the days will grow shorter and thus permit him to run full time.

The old store building, which was vacated last week as an office building, by the Wheeler Lumber Company, is no longer in evidence having been torn down by mill employees and every trace of the old landmark is gone, no more to remind Wheelerites of the pioneer days of the lumbering industry on this bay. The old mill structure is also being dismantled piece by piece until nothing but the skeleton remains.

Steps are being taken to call a special election to bond Wheeler school district for $5,000 in order to provide time means to build a new school house in Brighton and also purchase a suitable building site. The plan will undoubtedly receive the undivided support of the taxpayers in this district since the people of Brighton are sadly in need of a modern school building which has not been their portion up to the present time.

The Misses Ruth Clark and Ruth Owen, of Cloverdale, were callers in Wheeler last Saturday. Miss Clark was expected to take charge of the schools in this district as teacher but she decided to remain in Cloverdale where she has been teaching for the past month. Miss Owen will serve in her stead, however, the board of directors having decided to accept her application for the position.

Mrs. Fred Stubbs, of Bellingham, Wn., arrived here Saturday to join her husband who is employed at Jensen's shingle mill. The newly-weds are now comfortably located in a cozy bungalow in Wheeler. Their friends gave them a pleasant surprise Monday evening and made Mr. Stubbs come through with the cigars and candy as is customary on all such occasions. This matrimonial stunt is an expensive proposition sometimes, but the consensus of opinion seems to be that it is worth every cent it costs.

FIERCE ARAB DOGS.

Easy to Put the Big Brutes to Flight if One Knows the Trick.

The village dogs of Arabia are a real danger to strangers, whom they attack on sight without provocation. By strangers I mean any one except their own immediate owners, whether natives or not, writes Lady Ramsay in the Sunday School Times. They are, as a rule, great, powerful brutes, often very handsome, extremely fierce and capable of defending the flocks from wolves and other marauders. I have often been told that when attacked by these ferocious animals the proper thing to do is to sit down quickly on the ground, when they will at once desert.

But for my part I never had the courage to try this plan and had never seen it done during all my years of travel till last year. We had stopped to rest and eat our lunch in a village, and I was looking out from an open balcony and saw an elderly Turk coming along between some houses opposite.

Suddenly two huge dogs, barking furiously, dashed at him from an open gateway. Instantly he dropped to the ground in a sitting position. For a moment I thought he had fallen and expected to see the dogs on top of him. To my astonishment they turned and fled, their tails between their legs.

Before they could return, if they would have done so, a couple of villagers appeared, helped the old fellow to his feet and accompanied him out of the range of my vision.
