SEARCHING FOR THE ENEMY.

The Cruisers Take the Lead and Act as Scouts, Keeping in Touch With One Another and Report by Wireless to the Battleships That Follow.

Very few people realize the great importance of wireless telegraphy in time of war or strained relations—for instance, a fleet of battleships at sea while their country is at war with another power. Each ship in that fleet has its wireless installation, adjusted so that they can send and receive signals and messages to other squadrons at sea or in harbor and to stations ashore. One ship of that fleet is always in direct touch with the navy department. The chance of interference from an enemy's ship is reduced so as to be almost not worth counting. Each ship in a battle fleet is responsible for some station ashore or for a cruiser squadron of flotilla or torpedo boat destroyers. All foreign intelligence and the movements of foreign ships go to the capital by telegraph, cablegram and wireless from different parts of the world, and from thence it is transmitted to the admiral in charge of the fleet, who directs his ship accordingly.

The whole safety of a battle fleet depends on wireless telegraphy in time of war.

When a number of battleships are steaming along, perhaps looking for the enemy, it would not do for them to run into a superior number of the enemy's battleships. To guard against this a great number of cruisers are sent out ahead and spread a number of miles across. The duty of these ships is to keep a thorough lookout and report to the ship in the battle fleet looking out on their particular zone. This ship in turn reports by semaphore or Morse lamp to the admiral of the battle fleet. The cruisers are sometimes assisted by torpedo boat destroyers. Now, if thirty of these ships are used it will be readily seen that the area of their vision is enormous, and it would be almost impossible for a fleet to pass unnoticed. Immediately any of the ships sight the enemy's squadron they would report at once by wireless, stating the number of ships sighted, with their speed, altitude and longitude, etc. The admiral would then give his orders as to wireless. If the admiral determines to attack he directs the cruisers to steam at full speed and take refuge behind the battle fleet.

Let us suppose we are reconnoitering in hostile waters. The cruisers are ordered to spread themselves out in the van-guard of the fleet on lookout duty. They steam along without lights of any description. These great vessels, invisible as the night can make them, are prowling on the troubled waters. Yet they are very active. Ceaselessly they communicate one with another, for in each vessel, hidden as far as possible from external view, is the soundless and poised wireless room. Here the operator is at work, the electric lamp glowing brilliantly above him but a messenger enters with an order from the commodore. Immediately as the handle of the door is touched and pulled open by the entrant the lights go out, and pitch darkness prevails until once again the door is closed behind him and automatically the lights are switched on. That is part of the secrecy which prevails on a battleship in time of war.

The men on lookout duties are stationed in various parts throughout the cruiser. Their duty is to keep their eyes open as there is always a chance that one of the enemy's destroyers may come rushing along at a speed of some thirty miles an hour, shoot a torpedo into the ship and get away unscathed. At the best of times it takes a gunnery to strike a vessel going at this speed, but in the darkness possibilities of the marauder's escape are increased tenfold, and only the eyes of the crew and watchers can, as far as possible, safeguard mishap. As soon as anything is sighted it is reported to the battle fleet. This is done by the wireless, and the operator is compelled to work at high pressure, for he has to read every message a cruiser sends, inform his captain and himself get in touch with the fleet if his officer should desire to send a reply. Then there is the admiral of a fleet to be considered. The operator must keep a good lookout in case some battle order should be transmitted from this important quarter.

Lands Cheaply Logged Off

Feecey-Bremer Co., Put Economical Land Clearing Machine on Market

Tillamook, Oregon.

The Feecey-Bremer Co., has just completed a very economical device for clearing land in the shape of a gasoline donkey engine, equipped with a 10 h. p. heavy duty engine. The total weight of the machinery is 5,200 lbs., mounted on runners and can be pulled anywhere on a straight line by its own power.

The donkey part consists of a double drum, double friction, equipped with breaks. It has 400 feet of 1/2 in. cable and 800 feet of 3/4 inch cable. As a demonstration it recently pulled with ease a 20 foot log 3 feet in diameter over rough ground. Anyone wishing a demonstration of the workings of the machine can witness the same by calling at the Feecey-Bremer Co. Works.

The price for the above equipment ranges from $700 for 10 h. p. up, larger sizes costing accordingly.

The engine consumes distillate, consuming 6 gallons in 10 hours, cost 10c a gallon.

The engine used is detachable and can be used for other things.

Feecey-Bremer Co. are offering a fine proposition for two or more farmers who wish to go in together on a device that will clear their land cheaply and easily. Two men can run the machinery used and handle it successfully.

Those who may have use for such a machine will do well to investigate.
