TUESDAY MARCH 23, 1915.

The United States has entered upon its career as a world power. The war has begun, and the world is being reshaped. The United States has not suffered much during the past year. It has a big balance in our favor. It exports of goods and services to the rest of the world will soon be a grand total to Uncle Sam.

Indications are pointing to the fact that business conditions throughout the country will soon be normal. Labor is being retrained and everything seems to be in the way of a normal business. The industry of this country has not suffered much during the past year. It has a big balance in our favor. It exports of goods and services to the rest of the world will soon be a grand total to Uncle Sam.

AT THE ENDS OF THE WORLD.

The world's trade has dropped nearly 50 per cent. The exports of the United States dropped 40 per cent, and Great Britain's exports fell 45 per cent. Australian exports dropped from $43,000,000 to $26,000,000, while her imports fell 60 per cent.

These tremendous figures. They are a full background for the dreadful scene of blood and slaughter being started on the sinking fields of abandoned Europe. But there are fires far more momentous as to Germany.

America's exports to Germany for August were $28,737 against $31,391,000 for August 1914. It was almost the wiping out of trade. It was paralysis. Men were dazed by the sudden collapse of enterprise, suspended while armies were mobilizing. Ports were crowded with ships without cargoes. Exchanges in New York and London was quoted as high as $6.50 a premium that prohibited commercial transactions.

The fishermen in Labrador suddenly found his market cut off. The nitrate miner in Chile was without a buyer. The dealer in bristles in Siberia found the silk market in China being nearly shut for purchasers. The cotton growers in the north saw his markets closed and his crop rotting in the fields. The wool growers in the west saw their wool rotting in the fields. The sugar growers in the south saw their sugar rotting in the fields. The fruit growers in the north saw their fruit rotting in the fields. The vegetable growers in the south saw their vegetables rotting in the fields. The dairy farmers in the north saw their milk rotting in the cans. The stock raisers in the south saw their stock rotting in the pens.

The world's trade has dropped nearly 50 per cent. The exports of the United States dropped 40 per cent, and Great Britain's exports fell 45 per cent. Australian exports dropped from $43,000,000 to $26,000,000, while her imports fell 60 per cent.
