AROUND THE FARM.

When a farmer either by good luck or great skill has raised a fine crop he owes it to himself to sell it to the best advantage. Professor A. A. McDowell of Wisconsin says it is easily possible for farmers to double or even treble their crops by better cultivation and diversifying. Get a weaning colt used to being haltered and by the time he is six months old he will stand hitched like an old horse. No animal is more susceptible to improvement by breeding and feeding than the pig. If you are going to rent land have a lawyer draw up a fair lease. Sheep will eat more than 100 kinds of weeds that are unpalatable to cattle. Thorough cultivation is a mighty factor in increasing the profits on a dairy farm.

WHAT ALFALFA NEEDS

Soil Free From Weeds, Plenty of Lime and Good Drainage.
Nine years ago I was seized with a strong desire to raise alfalfa. This was in Peunung, Wis. After reading the "Method of Procedure" which brought success to others, I thought it an easy matter to secure a crop, so I decided to try it on a small scale, writes a correspondent of the Farm and Fireside. I followed the plans described, sent to Washington for "bacterial culture," put on 500 pounds of burnt lime to the acre, sowed the seed in July and waited for it to grow into real money. It grew well that fall and covered the ground through the winter. The next spring it turned yellow and died. My loss was $50 or more. I blamed the failure on the culture and the small amount of lime applied. In 1910 I tried it again, putting in three-fourths of an acre. I plowed the ground in April, top dressed it with good manure, gave the piece frequent harrowings through April, May and June and put on one ton of burnt lime. I sent away for fascinating soil taken from an old alfalfa field. I paid 75 cents a hundred pounds for it besides the freight. This soil was scattered over the piece by hand. Next I applied phosphate fertilizer, and in July sowed the seed. This piece caught well, and we have mowed it every year since. In 1911 another piece of two and one-quarter acres was added to this, making about three acres in both pieces. I followed the same plan in particular in this piece. Next I applied two tons of ground limestone to the acre. Then I procured 200 pounds of nitrate of soda, 200 pounds of bone meal and 900 pounds of 0-10-10 fertilizer, mixed them together and sowed this evenly over the piece and harrowed thoroughly. Then in July I sowed twenty-five pounds of alfalfa to the acre. It grew well, and last season I mowed it three times and got fifteen tons of nice alfalfa from the three acres. You will notice that it is a great deal of trouble to get the crop started, but it is well worth the efforts put forth, as alfalfa is worth nearly as much as bean, corn or oats. To be successful in getting the crop started four things must be supplied with: (1) Soil free from weeds or weed seeds; (2) soil made sweet with lime; (3) soil well under drained; and (4) soil containing organic matter and supplemented with nitrogen, phosphorus and potash.

Homemade Seed Tester.
In handling seeds the percentage that will grow can easily be determined by the use of the homemade tester shown herewith. It is made of a couple of dinner plates and a piece of canton flannel. If there is no cloth handy use a piece of blotting paper about the size of the plates. Take 100 or 200 seeds just as they come, making no selection. Moisten the cloth, lay one thickness on the plate, count the seeds, spread the other end of the cloth over them and put in a temperature of 70 degrees. On the second and each succeeding day the sprouted seeds should be taken out and counted.

AN EFFICIENT TESTER

Fortilizing Fruit Trees.
In some foreign experiments the use of stable manure is advocated when the tree is first planted and the subsequent application of commercial fertilizers from year to year in a series of holes distributed around the tree about on a line with the circumference of the crown. The depth of the holes is to be increased as the tree becomes older and the fertilizer is to be well mixed with soil or other material to prevent burning the roots. It is desirable to determine the depth of the feeding roots for various trees in different soils in order to fix the optimum depth of the holes.—American Agriculturist.
