TUESDAY MAY 25, 1915

Our stand out front Mrs. Baker tells us that the restoration of the tariff allowing the importation of Canadian lumber has closed many mills at Oregon. Now the fact of the matter is that most of the Canadian mills are closed also. With Mrs. Baker tell us how the side mills of Canada are able to glut our American markets.

We note in a late issue of an Ottawa, (Can.) newspaper that there is a whole sale there at 14 and 15c per pound. Still Mrs. Baker will tell you that the importation of foreign cheese has caused the slump in cheese prices on the Pacific coast. It has been something since any foreign cheese has been shipped to the coast.

In our writup of the Fairview Grange meeting of last Thursday we stated that the Grange had received a communication recommending cement roads and that the Fairview Grange had passed a resolution recommending cement roads. We were incorrect. The communication was recommended. It seems that there is some difference between a cement and a concrete road.

Some of our high tariff standpat friends who are hounding the Democrats and the reduction of the tariff because of the idleness in the country, will argue that a high tariff will shut out our home industries and the employment of our labor. Now it is a fact that the war has thrown such a barrier about our home industries that the importation of foreign goods has been very light indeed during the past nine months and still we have the idleness. It seems to be that the war has proven the fallacy of the high tariff idea. America has prospered in the past because of its ability to trade with foreign countries and the less that trade is hampered the better it is for us.

One week from today the voters of the city will decide whether they want a new city hall or not. Tillamook has several new city hall for some time, but not until recently have the people taken a special interest in the matter. A new city hall will cost about $15,000, not more and possibly less. The boys need better quarters; we need suitable quarters for the holding of public meetings and conventions; and then the city council needs a better place in which to meet and transact business. There never was a more favorable time for building a city hall. Bonds are selling well and the labor occasioned by the building of a city hall would help out considerably just now.

After commenting to some extent upon the outrages recently perpetrated upon American people and American commerce on the high seas, under the caption of "The President and our People," the Scientific American pays a splendid tribute to President Wilson in the summing up of the article as follows:

"A grave responsibility rests upon the President of the United States at this crisis. It is a fortunate thing for the people of this United States that they have at the head of the Government one in whom they have every confidence, who all through this long and painful struggle has shown a wisdom, a patience, a conscientiousness, and a high-mindedness which have evoked the admiration of all American citizens. The rights of our citizens are being abused, the rights of humanity are being violated, and what course is it possible for us to assume? This we leave in your hands, Mr. President. It is against the tradition and the unwritten law of this land for us to engage in any European conflict; the policy of our Government for the last one hundred and twenty-five years has been so shaped that we are not prepared to engage in such a conflict; it is not our purpose or our wish. The establishment of a large standing army is contrary to the spirit of our people. We have neither the army nor equipment necessary for war, even our warships are in such a deplorable condition that a policy is hardly to be entertained. Our fleet would be of little, if any, service in this worldwide maritime warfare. We are content to leave in your hands, Mr. President, the shaping of the course which this great nation should pursue, feeling that the rights of its citizens will be fully protected, and that its reputation for honor, for fair dealing and dignity will not be allowed to suffer."

COMMUNICATION

To the Editor

Tillamook Herald:

In May 1875 my friend W. H. (Billy) Hopkins and myself left Portland, for a visit to the then almost terra incognita of Tillamook. After being held up at North Yamhill for about three days by Doc Morris, the Housewife of that valley burg, by stories of storms in the mountains, we came to the conclusion that it always rained up there and our revenue short by striking out West. After crossing the summit and going down the Frank River we ran into our first bear, or rather we had and let him run off.

Billy was then shooting a m with a pocket gun at about three paces, but I interfered, which gave him a chance to shoot the mountain, when he did in a hurry after one square hole at my companion. Coming down the hill where we could look down on Uncle Billy's tent we saw what we took to be a patch of spots, but when moved to be strawberries from which Mrs. Hopkins had already gathered 20 quarts, yet the ones were still loaded with berries, to which she invited us to help ourselves.

This was before the era of good roads in Tillamook and we found difficulty in negotiating the mud and till farmers will appreciate this, but managed to make the last two miles into town by wading a worn fence. One of the prettiest and most welcome sights to greet us was the figure of Miss Lou Vaughan, a luscious girl of about a year, standing in the doorway of Doc Lassell's hotel, which with one general store, and one drug store comprised the town of Hopartoon—The Tillamook of today.

At that time there was neither road or bridge north of town, and only one road house. To travel north it was first necessary to go a couple of miles east to a wreck boat on the Wilson River and by means of fast logs and other wreck debris, cross the various streams. Where Bay City now stands there was one house. To get to the mouth of the bay it was necessary to tramp around its shores when the tide was out.

We were more fortunate on our first trip down for Mrs. J. Elliott and her son Tracy kindly made room for us in their canoe, feeding us at Jawson's with directions how to find Capt. J. J. Dawson (old probabilities) where we spent our first night.

Having decided to make our homes in Tillamook I left Billy there and one week later started from Hopartoon at 5 a.m. and reached North Yamhill just as our friend, Doc Morris was ringing his supper bell, but could not make him believe I had tramped from Tillamook that day, but I knew it for I went around for several days in Portland in slippers on account of blistered feet. I guess it would take me nearly a week to make the trip now, although the railroad makes it no longer necessary. What changes time has wrought; today Tillamook has the best roads in the state outside of Multnomah. In the years past I have visited the house of every resident more than once, but on a recent visit to Tillamook more than half the people I met were strangers, and I found my friend William had developed a most benign countenance, a very different one to that with which he scared brim when I carried a fence military moustache.

ATTORNEYS ARGUE IN RIGGS BANK CASE.

Washington, May 24.—Attorneys are today concluding their arguments in the Riggs bank case. The government attorneys are today concluding their arguments in the Riggs bank case. The government attorneys are today concluding their arguments in the Riggs bank case.

When Mr. McAdoo became secretary of the Riggs bank, he found that the president of the Riggs bank was an official of the National City bank of $2,000 a year. What was the purpose of the National City bank in keeping a high salaried official and paying in the capital of the national investigation disclosed a remarkable situation. The secretary found that the late president of the National City bank was secretary of the Riggs bank and was succeeded by the now president of the Riggs bank. It is well known that the National City bank is a large holder of call bonds on the stock exchange.

From 1898 to 1911 the National City bank was receiving funds from the United States on deposit and paid no interest. At times from one hour to one week of all the deposits in the United States in national banks, was in the National City bank of about $100,000,000 at times $120,000,000 to $130,000,000.

When Mr. McAdoo took office he proposed to cut that sum less and to pay government deposits not to come into the bank. He proposed to pay the National City bank for the commercial needs of the country.

McAdoo Vindicated.

Washington, May 24.—The conclusion of five days' arguments, before the Supreme Court, in the Riggs bank case, today under adjournment of the Supreme Court in the Riggs bank case, was brought by the Riggs National Bank to engage Secretary McAdoo, director of the currency, and Treasurer Burke from alleged unlawful participation in the case.

As it seemed to the plaintiff, government attorneys were led by the court to say that the government, into the treasury of the United States on bonds on the bank and withheld to cover the money deposited by the Comptroller of the currency, certain reports of the plaintiff's examining officer against the payment of this money into the treasury was granted at the subject of the proceedings, and the court will take upon question of continuing it.

Arbitrary Power Not Observed.

London, May 24.—Indicated that he would occupy some time considering the case, but would endeavor to dispose of it before July 1. In denying the prayer for an injunction pending litigation he said that without considering what evidence hereafter might be presented, there was nothing in the record before him which showed the government officials had exercised arbitrary power in regard to the refusal to select the Riggs bank as a reserve agency.

"It seems to me on the record as it stands that the Government officials would be guilty in their duty in selecting it as an agency for new applicant banks," said the justice. "The evidence here is of persistent violations of the law and those violations did not begin when Mr. Williams came into office and they have continued to this day."

Malice Noted "on Other Side."

The court also considered on the record as now made, up the charge that Secretary McAdoo showed malice in an interview in his office with Riggs bank officials. The justice said it appeared to him that the malice was rather "on the other side."

At the opening of the day's session, Samuel Untermyer, of Government counsel, presented a bookkeeper's affidavit that there were 6000 stock transactions shown on the books of Lewis Johnson & Co., stockbrokers, in the name of the Riggs National Bank.
