REMINGTON-UMC
 —the Deliberate Choice of the Great Body of American Sportsmen

Nowhere else in the whole field of sport do you find the like of the strong public opinion in favor of Remington-UMC.

This Remington-UMC public opinion has been growing steadily since 1858. It is the result of the achievements of Remington-UMC in the design and construction of Arms and Ammunition. But none of these achievements stands the test of your American sportsman in the world.

—and the most loyal to the arms and ammunition that give him the service he knows he ought to have.

He it is who is holding up the hands of the Remington-UMC dealer—making the Red Ball Mark of Remington-UMC the Sign of Sportsmen's Headquarters in your town.

JOHN BARLEYCORN BY JACK LONDON IN 6 REELS AT STAR

Following is the synopsis of the play "John Barleycorn" in 6 reels when will be given at the Star Theatre on Wednesday and Thursday evenings, July 26th and 27th.

Synopsis

"I must ask you to walk with me in all sympathy and understanding. I am a normal, average man. In this day I have a physical longing for alcohol. Yet I am to every man and at every turn John Barleycorn has beckoned. All paths lead to him. The first when I was only five."

So begins the story of Jack London's encounters with John Barleycorn.

The picture is unique in that it is the true story of a man's life, told by himself, and frankly taking the audience into his confidence. No man has ever opened his heart or the power of his past more freely than has Mr. London in this recital. For the sake of driving his lesson home he has been unsparring both in telling of his own conduct and in describing conditions. And when that conduct and that lesson relate to so intimate a side of a man's life as the part drink has played in it, it is readily conceded that in "John Barleycorn" the public is offered a production unlike anything it has seen before.

Six reels tell the story beginning with the little chap of five, who drinks the beer intended for his father, plowing in the distant field; and ending with the dramatic fight of the successful writer of today against the final mastery of Barleycorn.

"It is a swift and impassioned story of adventure, drawn with the hard lines of realism, but lighted with all the color of romance."

The grueling factory toil during childhood; the adventurous life on San Francisco Bay as an oyster pirate; the scenes aboard the sealer "Sophie Sutherland" with the "exploration" of the Bonin Islands; the glimpse of San Francisco's Barbary Coast; Hay-Dee and her love, the first influence which led this former newsboy and unlearned seal-hunter toward his present position; and, above all, the part John Barleycorn played in all this—these are the chief factors in the vivid scenes of the play.

Because Mr. London does full justice to the defenders of Barleycorn's place in society, his final indictment is the more thrilling and convincing. Indeed, as will be seen, this indictment is based chiefly on the very strength of those defenders' arguments.

In addition to the autograph and medallion which preface all the Bonworth-London productions, "John Barleycorn" is distinguished by a close view of Mr. London on his yacht, "The Roamer." When the play begins we see Mr. London writing the opening lines. It closes as he writes the concluding caption, while speaking the words, slowly read, "And this is my message."

KINGSLEY STAMMERED.

And George Eliot Was a Bore, According to Mrs. Waitford.

Mrs. Waitford the novelist, published some years ago a novel of imagination of Victorian London, in which she made it made to many persons in the world of letters. One of Mrs. Waitford's acquaintances in the Great East was Charles Kingsley.

"One day Charles Kingsley came in and we had an opportunity of seeing if he were like his photograph which had been sent to Mrs. W. and I own the truth it startled me as to how very real in the face, perhaps from leading a very busy life in all weathers."

"In ordinary conversation Mr. Kingsley stammers a good deal, but being conscious of it, he has taken pains to overcome the defect by speaking very slowly—almost too slowly, so when we heard him make a speech on one occasion we felt inclined to assist him on it because so stammering."

"Tom Bowen Hughes' Mrs. Waitford described as a thin middle aged man, neither stout nor thin with fair hair and blue eyes and a round, pleasant face."

"In 1856 Mrs. Waitford first met George Eliot in the house of John Blackwelder in Edinburgh, and remembering that occasion she says:

"I should I look forward to that evening, but—should I confess it?—I could hardly remember it. I had a conversation with her, but—she had a very high forehead and rather long, thin nose and particular manner, which I had never seen before. I had been set down beside the guest of the evening, at her request. I had a very good conversation with her, and she had a very good mind. Her hair heavily drove the wheels of her chariot. How interminably dragged that interview."

"I can only wonder, says the West-plaster Gazette, what George Eliot thought of Mrs. Waitford."

Dr. Johnson's Homeliness.

Samuel Johnson was himself—and this is a quality rarely found in "plain" men—under no illusion as to his personal appearance. Dr. Burney tells us that on one occasion while Miss Burney was examining his portrait he peeped over her shoulder and, with a ludicrous half laugh, exclaimed: "Ah, ha, Sam Johnson! I see thee—and an ugly dog thou art!"—London Times.

Mechanical Riddles.

Engineers say that among the things that will never be settled are the following: Whether a long screwdriver is better than a short one of the same family; whether water wheels run faster at night than they do in the daytime, the best way to harden steel; which side of the belt should run next the pulley, and the right way to lace belts.—London Express.

Mistake Somewhere.

Servant (answering bell)—My master isn't in, sir. You may leave the bill if you wish. Gaffer (in surprise)—But I have no bill. I wish to—Servant (in surprise)—But when you first came in, I saw you had a bill. You must have called at the wrong house.—Pittsburgh Press.

The Ruling Passion.

"Pa, with all his money, will never let us take our rightful place in society." "Why, he's most indulgent. He has just bought the family a magnificent automobile." "Yes, but unless we watch him all the time he can't resist the temptation to take on a few paying passengers as he rides around."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Thoughts.

Thoughts are much greater than things. They are vital forces and have endless effects. What you think today determines what you will be in years to come.

Would Quality.

Quality Financier—Um! So you are a quality man, are you? I know you are, but I know you are not.—New York Times.

FIND MARKET FOR LOGANBERRY.

(From Eugene Register.)

What is to be done with the loganberry industry? is the query that is being made rather frequently these days. The answer is obvious. It is this: Find a market for these berries.

This, of course, at once calls forth the question, how shall we proceed to find a market? The answer is equally obvious and equally simple. Follow the example of other business men who have a product of high quality to sell and who seek a national market—advertise.

The proposition is easily stated. In the loganberry the Willamette valley has a commodity that all the rest of the country wants—whether the rest of the country is aware of the fact or not. It is peculiarly appetizing, for it has a piquant flavor that is distinctive and unusual. As a drink its juice is unexcelled. The dried berry, when properly prepared, comes back more nearly to the original flavor than any other fruit. Loganberry pies, made of either the dried or canned fruit, are delicious enough to set before the most critical of epicures.

This berry is produced in complete perfection only in the Willamette valley, so that it has all the rest of the world for a market. It is a special crop that is practically without competition, so growers do not need to fear the effects of heavy production in other sections. Every section of the country outside of the Willamette val-
