TURKISH SPY SYSTEM.

It Not Only Keeps Tab Upon Strangers, but Spies Upon Itself.

Turkey boasts of more spies to the square mile than any other country, as any one who has been to Turkey will agree.

The peculiar thing about these spies is that they themselves cannot be trusted, so that a regular chain of spies is the result. There are spies to spy upon the spies.

The government officials have their own spies to watch other people, but even the great authorities themselves are already being spied upon.

What is more, the method of spying is quite open, for the spies will stand by whatever two or three foreigners are gathered together and listen to the conversation. Visitors to Turkey naturally get worried over such attentions, especially when it might be their bad luck to be followed about for weeks or months.

It is the "uninflated" visitor who usually receives the most attention, since he or she will carry on conversation in a quiet undertone. The person who knows Turkey converses in a loud tone for all and sundry—the spies especially—to show that he is only engaged in pleasure or legitimate business, and the wise man leaves the topic of politics severely alone. — London Answers.

CAPTURING A MODEL.

A Complexion That Delacroix Could Not Let Escape.

Delacroix, the painter, was walking out one day in Paris with a friend of his when he fell into a brown study. "What is up with you now?" said the friend.

"I can't get a certain shade of yellow," replied the artist.

"What sort of yellow?"

"Just then a cab drove past.

"The very thing!" the painter gasped out. "Stop, stop!"

"I am engaged," the cabby replied without stopping.

Delacroix started in pursuit and at a steep place in the Rue des Martyrs overtook the cab. Opening the door, he said in tones of entreaty to the passenger inside:

"Please tell your driver to stop. I want your complexion for a painting on which I am at work. There is a color merchant close at hand. I shall not detain you above five minutes, and in acknowledgment of the service you render me I will present you with a sketch of my picture."

The bargain was struck. Delacroix got his yellow, and a few months later the "fate" received a sketch of his "Assassination of the Archbishop of Liege."

The People of China.

There are about sixty different peoples, or tribes, which go to make up the population of China. Practically nine-tenths of the population is to be found in China proper, the great majority being of the Chinese race. With the exception of a few Iranians and a few people of the hill tribes, all of the Chinese population belongs, physically, to various branches of the great Mongol-Tartar family. The government of the republic recognized five principal races when designing the new flag, which replaces the yellow dragon of the old national ensign with five stripes—orange, yellow, white, blue and black—symbolical of the five races comprised in the Chinese people, Mongol, Chinese, Manchu, Mohammedan and Tibetan.

History.

History is a voice forever sounding across the centuries the laws of right and wrong. Opinions alter, manners change, creeds rise and fall, but the moral law is written on the tablets of eternity. For every false word or unrighteous deed, for cruelty and oppression, for lust or vanity, the price has to be paid at last—not always by the chief offenders, but paid by some one. Justice and truth alone endure and live. Injustice and falsehood may be long lived, but doomsday comes at last to them in French revolutions and other terrible ways.—James Anthony Froude.

Soldiers and Mustaches.

The suggestion that soldiers should be clean-shaven would not have commended itself to Victor Emmanuel II., who held it incumbent on a soldier to look ferocious. One of his first acts in assuming the royal dignity after the battle of Novara was to change what he called his "milkop's appearance" by applying black dye to his hair and mustache, which were naturally fair. This he continued to use until his death, always applying the dye himself, for he hated barbers or valets to come near him.—London Chronicle.

Selecting a Vest.

"Haven't you any larger checks?"

"No," said the tailor. "These are the largest I have."

"I fear you have not a very extensive line of cloth."

"These are about as large as checks come in cloth. I might possibly make you up a vest out of tinoline."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A Perfect Cinch.

"What a very fortunate woman Mrs. Tipper is! Her husband never spares expense in gratifying her every wish."

"Is he so very rich?"

"No, but Mrs. Tipper is one of those enviable people who can have hysterics at will."—Pittsburgh Press.
