POPULIST CLUB MEETING.

The meeting on the 21, inst. was, as usual, highly entertaining. An executive committee was chosen composed of the following members:

W. J. Dean, John Abbott, A. J. Wilcox, H. H. Goddard and Jesse Adams.

The former as chairman of the committee will be a member of the county central committee. A motion was made and carried that the rent of the school house, in which the club now holds its meetings, be raised by voluntary monthly dues, each member agreeing to pay a stated sum regularly. This plan is much more satisfactory than passing the hat.

A few resolutions, which may be found on another page, offered by W. J. Dean brought out a lively discussion.

Mr. Breese and N. D. Brophy were especially vigorous in opposition. Indeed it might have been gathered from the remarks of the former that he was not overflowing with admiration for the rank and file of the Talent club. He seemed to be laboring under the impression that the club is running full tilt after strange gods. That he did not consider the club worth saving is evidenced by the fact that he ordered his name stricken from the list of membership, together with the names of the other members of his household.

S. M. Robison also withdrew. He couldn't see that he had gained anything by leaving the g. o. p. Bro. C. Sherman deprecated the kicking tendency on the part of some members. Mr. Dean responded in defense of the kickers, illustrating his remarks by a story to the effect that a milkman on his way to town stopped at a creek to replenish his cans.

Into one, by accident, he dipped a couple of frogs. These swam around for a while in the strange element when one became discouraged and sank to the bottom. The other being more resolute kept kicking. His vigorous kicking so agitated or churned the milk that a nice ball of butter was soon formed. When the milkman opened the can there sat the plucky frog on the ball of butter enjoying himself as well as could be expected under the circumstances. His kicking had saved his life. Mr. Dean believed in kicking.
