

CHAMPION SARAZEN SHOWS CADDIES FEW FANCY SHOTS

Gene Sarazen, national open and professional golf champion, is seen showing the caddies at the Sleepy Hollow (N. Y.) golf club a few shots. The caddies had their hands full for they carried the bag for more than 250 father and son teams entered in the annual Pater et Filius golf tournament.

RENT.

Rent is what the poet had in mind when he wrote them immortal lines about "Falling Dew"—only he spelled it wrong.

The word rent also means, in one sense, hole, which is what the average householder finds himself in about the time the other kind is due. In this respect the Arabs are a lucky race because they carry their places of abode around with them and when they weary of scenery in one spot they move on to another.

Amar Khayam had this to say on the subject—although we are not certain that he said it: "Comes now the pesky landlord for his rent; And I, unlucky gink, ain't got a cent; The only way, it seems, to beat this game, Is take the doorbell off, or buy a tent."

However, anyone who is familiar with Mister Khayam's views of life will readily understand the reason for his harduppishness.

In conclusion, let us observe that rent used to be what a feller had left after paying the grocery bill. But even that day has passed now.
