BARNYARD ROOSTER IS FAST LOSING HIS JOB

Looks like a tough dreary future ahead for the barnyard rooster unless he goes out and finds a new job.

His days of usefulness as an alarm clock for his "Biddy" partners is about over.

No longer do the faithful hens need his clarion daybreak call to rouse them to their sense of duty.

Experiments have been made with electric lighting which prove conclusively that chanticleer is excess baggage around the poultry house.

Electric lights installed in the henhouse serve to wake up "Biddy" at any hour of the early morn; she stretches her legs, shakes her feathers, yawns a few times, and shortly the loud and staccato cackle assures the farmer that another fresh egg has been ushered into the waiting world.

THE LOWLY PRETZEL IS PUTTING ON AIRS

The pretzel, or as they used to call it in pre-Volstead days, the "bretzel," is about to have a renaissance. A York, Pa., bakery is installing a gas-fired pretzel oven which will be the largest pretzel gas-fired oven in the world.

Seventy-five feet long and nine feet six inches wide are the outside dimensions of that oven and the combustion chamber will be sixty-five feet long and eight feet wide. For a ten-hour day, the oven will use 14,000 cubic feet of gas, or 1400 cubic feet of gas an hour. Fifty barrels of flour a day will be needed for the raw material of the baked delicacy and the output, estimated, will be 1,250,000 pretzels daily.

From the time the flour is dumped into the dough mixer it does not touch a hand until it is delivered to the packing department and is ready for shipment. Every pretzel, large and
