THE COUNTRY WEEKLY.

You and I have heard people speak with scorn or amusement of the country weekly. You and I, who as intelligent readers have a proper sense of values, do not err in that way.
We respect, and moderately admire the "local" paper as an institution, the mouthpiece of public opinion, the educator of the masses, the scripture serched by the multitudes, the guiding star of the provinces, the articulation of the yearnings of the non-efffete, the Bible of the commorality, the well-spring of the great silent vote. Here is the true power of the press, not in its most imposing manifestation; not in its furthest reach, but its surest grasp; its influence, might and power working in the world.
Certainly, literature has done more to make life beautiful, but it has not contributed so much to its management.—Edward N. Teall in "Books and Folks."
