In last week's paper we noticed an article about the delegates returned from the Marshfield convention signed by one "who won't tell." It must have been Nancy B. Hall that wrote the article for she never told about her getting up at 4 in the morning to beat the other campers to the apricot tree to get what fell to the ground. They say they had apricots for breakfast.

Mrs. Spencer said when she read the paper the old folks dance was Wednesday evening instead of Thursday evening for she was there.

ONE WHO WENT

Use of newspaper advertising costs money, but it doesn't cost much in consideration of what you get, which is the opportunity to talk to the entire community to say just what you want to say, when and how you want to say it.—M. S. Sloan, president, Brooklyn Edison company.

EARLY CELEBRATION IN NEHALEM TOLD

The first Fourth of July celebration that Mrs. J. H. Aldridge of Clatskanie remembers was one held at Mist in 1882 when she was 10 years old. At that time there were merely trails through the woods and people lived several miles apart.

The chief means of transportation was horseback, as this was prior to the advent of wagons.

About 50 people participated in the festivities, the children amusing themselves at games and swings. A community outdoor picnic was one of the features of the occasion. Nelson Cole, a Mist resident at that time, made a speech on the inception of Independence Day.

Some of the people who were present at the celebration in Mist 46 years ago were Jim and George Jones, Dora Reynolds, Mrs. Julia Whittig, Joe John, Frank and Anna Banzer, Ain Wallace, Lewis Beckman, Irving Knowles and Mrs. A. D. Mells, all of whom live in and about Mist.

Another old-time picnic, the memory of which recurred to Mrs. Aldridge's mind, was held in Nels Peterson's barn in Natal 43 years ago. People from Vernonia and Mist attended the picnic and dance. The entertainment consisted of fireworks dancing a picnic in the afternoon and a midnight dinner at Mr. Peterson's, the dance lasting all night. Roads had been built and more families had moved in, so there was quite a gathering at Natal. Mrs. Aldridge said.—Clatskanie Chief.

PINE SHIPMENTS HIT BY RUST OREGON CORNER AND FOURTEEN STATES AFFECTED.

Edict Also Goes Out Against Some Currant and Berries as Pest Carriers.

Washington, D. C.—The continued spread of white pine blister rust in those sections of the United States to which that variety of pine is native led Secretary of Agriculture William M. Jardine tentatively to promulgate drastic interstate quarantine regulations Saturday, acting upon the recommendations of the federal horticultural board. The proposed restrictions will become effective September 1, and apply in general to a tier of counties in northwestern Oregon, as well as the entire state of Washington and 13 other states.

The regulations would prohibit interstate movement of five-leaved pines, currants and gooseberry plants from the counties of Clatsop, Columbia, Lincoln, Polk, Tillamook, Washington and Yamhill, in Oregon. They would also bar such movement of European black currant plants in the entire intermountain and Pacific coast region. Interstate movement of cultivated red and white currant plants and cultivated gooseberry plants within the restricted areas will be permitted under certain stipulations, which include inspection during the month of October previous to shipment, absence of blister rust within one mile of the place where they are grown and disinfection of roots and crown in a lime-sulphur solution.

Investigation has shown that rust cannot go from pine to pine without an intermediate state of development on currant or gooseberry bushes, which accounts for their inclusion in the quarantine order.—Morning Oregonian.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK

By Edson R. Waite, Shawnee, Okla.

Harry R. Hill, advertising manager of the Fargo (North Dakota) Forum, says:

That we hear a great deal of complaint from retail merchants in all lines of business with reference to people trading with out-of-town concerns, patronizing mail order houses and peddlers, and one is inclined to sympathize with them and to condemn the peddlers and mail order concerns.

While we hold no briefs for these people, we must at last give them credit for their enterprise in going after business in an aggressive way instead of weeping about hard times and worrying about the profits the other fellow is making.

If retail merchants would put just half the effort behind their selling campaigns in proportion to the size of their business as the mail order house does, the mail order business would find pretty poor pickings in most any community.

If the people behind the counters in the average store knew half as much about the merchandise they are supposed to sell as the average peddler does, and would be just as willing to show their lines, and just half as anxious to make a sale, the peddlers would soon be forced into other lines of business.

Merchants in many cases encourage buying away from home. For instance, we'll say Mr. Jones is in the grocery business, his wife needs furniture—does he always buy from his fellow townsman across or up or down the street, No, he can save a few dollars by purchasing through some friendly salesman who doesn't happen to be selling the furniture man. The furniture man places his order for fruit for canning with a friend of his in the wholesale business in a nearby city; the jeweler buys his new suit from a peddler; the dentist sends away for his automobile accessories; the lawyer's wife buys her clothing in the big city, and so it goes. Others should buy at home, but when it comes to practicing this good rule, one is inclined to forgetfulness.

If retail merchants will try out these suggestions, then go after business in an aggressive way using local newspaper advertising and attractive window displays, two of the most effective mediums of advertising known to modern merchandising and neither of which is available to the peddler or the mail order house, it will be but a comparatively short time before they will have little cause to worry about either of these competitors.   7. Cultivate Personality. Personality is to a man what perfume is to the flower.
  8. Help and Share with Others. The real test of business greatness lies in giving opportunity to others.
  9. Be Democratic. Unless you feel right towards your fellowmen you can never be a successful leader of men.
  10. In All Things Do Your Best.

The man who has done his best has done everything. The man who has done less than his best has done nothing.
