Successful Dairy Herds Depend on—

- Proper but Economical Feeding. A balanced diet is a necessity to the cow as well as the human. Alfalfa hay, kale, bran and concentrated foods provide the proteins—ensilage, roots and grains provide the carbohydrates, or heat producing foods. For the summer, Ladino Clover has been found ideal for Oregon pasturage.
- Healthy Sturdy Stock. Although tuberculosis has nearly disappeared in the state, the best herds are periodically tested for tuberculosis and abortion diseases.
- Common Sense Management. Definite production standard of 350-400 lbs. is usually set. Test your cows—you may be keeping boarders. Good pure-bred sires may be purchased at reasonably low prices for every herd. A high producing herd cannot be had without one.
