What's Doing On Oregon Farms

COQUILLE — Four hundred pounds of yellow tag certified Ladino clover seed has been purchased from the Josephine county Ladino Clover Seed Growers association by a number of Coos County farmers, reports the county agent, through whose office the transaction was made.

HILLSBORO — Increase up to 50 per cent have been reported by Washington county farmers who applied superphosphate to alfalfa and red clover this year, according to W. F. Cyrus, county agent. Applications were made at rates varying from 200 to 150 pounds per acre. The material is also being tried out on strawberries this year.

CORVALLIS — Good crop rotation systems provide the easiest, most economical and surest means of maintaining and increasing long-time soil fertility on Oregon farms, according to C. V. Ruzek, professor of soil fertility at Oregon State college.

GOLD BEACH — The bortfield turnip, a new root crop which is rapidly becoming popular among coast farmers since its introduction by the John Jacobs Astor Experiment station at Astoria, is being tried out by Curry county farmers where it is doing very well, reports R. M. Knox, county agent, who has recently checked up on demonstration plots.

GRESHAM — Two demonstrations to determine the effect of fall application of fertilizer on strawberries have been started by M. H. Dahl and Olaf Tofte, both of Troutdale, in cooperation with S. B. Hall, county agent.

REDMOND — Two deer carcasses, one a seven, the other a four-pointer, were found, their antlers locked securely in the death struggle.
