

OREGON FARMERS PLAN-NING MORE CORN, TUR-KEYS FOR YEAR 1932

OREGON STATE COLLEGE, Corvallis — Another moderate increase in the Oregon corn acreage, more turkeys, but no increase in acreage of late potatoes or number of pullets to be raised, are in prospect this year, according to a report just released by the college extension service. These trends were indicated by intentions-to-produce surveys made by the U. S. department of agriculture, with supplemental information gathered by the extension service.

The corn outlook is relatively favorable, according to the report which says, "the demand for corn in Oregon during the 1932-33 marketing season, as usual, may be expected to exceed the supply of home-grown corn." The surveys indicated that growers intend to increase the acreage about 15 per cent, with somewhat greater increases indicated in the central Willamette valley and in Malheur county. Prices for corn in Oregon are adjusted largely by the cost of shipping corn in from other states, thus the farm price ranges well above the average of the whole country.

With respect to the late potato outlook the report points out that there may be no increase in the acreage in the whole country and possibly some decrease in the Pacific northwest, but the supply might be somewhat larger because the average yield of potatoes has been low for three years, because of drouth.

A survey by the college extension service indicates that about the same number of pullets will be raised on Oregon farms this year, but 20 per cent more turkeys.

The government survey of growers' intentions to plant spring wheat indicates that the acreage will be about the same as planted in 1931, but around 50 per cent more than was harvested last year when drouth caused heavy abandonment of spring wheat acreage.

was 187. The banner class was The Soldiers, which had 21.

CARE OF SEED POTATOES INSURES BETTER STANDS

Low yields of potatoes are frequently caused by poor stands, and these in turn are often the result of improper handling of seed potatoes just before planting, according to specialists at Oregon State college. Most commercial potato growers know exactly how to handle seed stock to get best stands, but it is believed that hundreds of smaller growers could profitably follow a few simple precautions in this respect.

Planting potatoes immediately after the pieces have been cut is one frequent cause of poor stands or weak hills because rotting may easily start on seed pieces put in the ground before the cut surfaces have a chance to heal.

Dusting the cut seed with land plaster or sulphur is sometimes recommended to guard against trouble, and it has proved effective in many instances. It is not necessary, however, according to experiment station plant pathologists, as a more simple method will give equally good if not better results.

This method is merely to make sure that the cut seed is kept fairly moist and in a dark place where the temperature is not lower than 55 degrees, for a couple of days before planting. Cut potatoes under such conditions will go through a process known as suberization by which a corky layer is formed just beneath the cut surface, which protects the potato piece almost as well as the original skin.

One might think that drying off the cut surfaces quickly would be the best way to protect them from rotting, but just the opposite is true, as drying cracks the surface, allowing the rot organism to get into the interior. Ordinarily the natural moisture is enough for the healing process if the cut potatoes are protected from sun or wind, but sometimes it may be necessary to add enough water to make sure they stay damp.

Other precautions in cutting potatoes are to make the cuts squarely across rather than slanting, so as to have a minimum of cut surface, and to discard any tubers that show signs of disease or discoloration when cut. Careful growers use two knives, keeping one in a bucket of formaldehyde solution at all times, and then changing knives whenever a discolored tuber is cut into.

O. J. Lighthouse
Cape Florida lighthouse was built in 1825-26 by the federal government. It was not of Spanish origin, although its somewhat dilapidated appearance has no doubt given rise to the belief that it dates back to the days of Spanish occupation. The tower was partly destroyed by Indians in July, 1836. It was not again relighted until the old tower was demolished and a new tower built in 1846-47. In 1861 the lighting apparatus was destroyed by a band of lawless persons, and the light was not relighted until April, 1866. The light was finally discontinued in June, 1878, when Fowley Rocks light was first exhibited.
