NEW BIOGRAPHY OF McLOUGHLIN SOON

The Macmillan Company, the world's largest book publishers, will release, in November, a new biography of that great leader of early Oregon, Dr. John McLoughlin. This book is the work of Richard G. Montgomery, young Portland business man who has made writing his hobby. His first book, Pechuck: Lorne Knight's Adventures in the Arctic, was a big success of two years ago. Montgomery's life of McLoughlin will appear under the title of The White Headed Eagle: Dr. McLoughlin, Builder of an Empire.

In the writing of it, he has had access to new as well as standard material and the few critics who have had an advance peep at the book pronounce it not only the finest book to date on Dr. McLoughlin but one of the most scholarly bits of original literature yet to emerge from the west.

The White Headed Eagle includes 110,000 words and consumed 18 month in the writing.

In business, Mr. Montgomery is assistant manager of The J. K. Gill Co., Portland. He is a grandson of the late J. K. Gill and is a great grandson of Dr. William H. Willson who came to Oregon in 1837 to join Jason Lee and who was one of the founders of Salem.

Pasteurized MILK

Is Not Cooked or Boiled Milk

Pasteurized milk is natural cow's milk, subjected for a period of not less than 30 minutes, to a temperature of not less than 140 degrees, nor more than 145 degrees Fahrenheit, and immediately cooled to a temperature of 50 degrees or lower, and kept at this low temperature until delivered.

Boiling temperature is 212 degrees — a heat which changes the taste and vitamin content of milk to a slight extent.

Holding the milk at the temperature of between 140 and 145 degrees for 30 minutes destroys the germs causing diphtheria, typhoid, dysentery, septic sore throat and tuberculosis, without altering the taste or food value of the milk.
