TYPEWRITER DAYS

Does a typewriter live a hard life? One can hardly know, but if we stop a while and think of all the ill-treatment a typewriter goes through every day, perhaps an understanding would come between us and that awkward piece of mechanism.

All day long, from early morning to late afternoon, the keyboard is pounded with unmerciful jabs, until the very clatter of the keys has become a dull monotonous tattoo. The only protest a typewriter can utter is the racket of the keys, and in the latter part of the day, you might hear the faithful rhythmic beat, long after the others are hooded and silent.

A typewriter never knows from one minute to the next how it will be treated. At one moment rough hands seize it and threaten to dislodge every spring and bolt. The only thing that saves it is the bell. Then perhaps for 45 minutes, dainty fingertips will flick over the keys with the utmost care for their behavior. For a full period it may remain silent for the idle student before it.

Can't you imagine a typewriter sighs for relief when a black hood envelopes it at night and the only memory of the day is scores of finger prints marked out by scores of others?

Editorial

ARMISTICE DAY

Armistice day should mean a great deal to the average student of Vernonia high school, because in the future it will be the young people of today that will decide whether we will have war or peace. It will be the young generation of today that will be running the government, so it should make everyone more determined to make the best of their life.

On this day everyone should take a vow to do their very best to keep America in peace rather than in war.

APPRECIATION

A sizeable and enthusiastic crowd surged about the sidelines as Vernonia trounced St. Marys Academy 43-0 Monday in an Armistice day game.

The members of the American Legion, sponsors of this game, are to be commended for the fine spirit with which they went about in making the game a huge success. The high school greatly appreciates their fine work and co-operations towards supporting our team.

We also wish to thank all the merchants who were so willing to cooperate with the high school by closing their business houses for the duration of the game. Exceptionally fine spirit has been shown by everyone this year and our team has had a most wonderful support by all the fans.
