the rest of the night.

Aw, this column is getting too teachery. Let's talk wore about the carnival.

Jack Childs shouted so loud trying to advertise the ghost walk, he frightened all the people away.

The cowboy quartet was going to play a piece as the crowd left the auditorium but when they were ready to play the crowd was all gone. Well, well, well.

There are no pins to prick the balloons so the balloons were not pricked.

We honestly believe that more popcorn was on the floor than in the people's stomachs before the affair was over.

We've been having some big arguments here lately. Some of them are, "Is there true love or is it infatuation?" The girls would sure get mad on that one. Which are smarter, men or women? That had a tragic ending. "False standards of living is the cause of the depression." That's too deep for us.

We got some real cowboys from that far away land of Mist.

They spend their noons trying to lasso each other without any success.

Miss Drake seem to be highly Scotch. She sold a hot-dog without the dog.

The sextet sang "I Ain't Got Nobody" and there were six beautiful bodies all decorated in formals.

Alice Hoffman had a terrifying experience the other day. She got her fingers jammed in the typing room window and she couldn't get them out nor could she move the window. Poor girl.

Lolamae Smith spells "think" "iith" "ing" "dot". First its modern music, then modern art, and now its modern spelling.

Dick Lewis regrets that he only has 10,000 bum wise cracks to give to his school. So do we.

Mr. Skuzie: "Everything I tell you goes in one ear and out the other."

Students: "You're wrong. Sound can't cross a vacuum."
