Oregon Rates in Nine Low Place Death Position

TB Increase Noted in 1936 Thought One-Tenth Is Gain

Although tuberculosis claimed more lives in Oregon in 1936 than in 1935, Oregon maintained her place with the ninth lowest tuberculosis death rate among 48 states, as shown by figures released Tuesday to the Oregon Tuberculosis Association by the United States census bureau. Tuberculosis still holds the deadly distinction as the leading cause of death to all persons dying between the ages of 20 and 40 years in the United States.

The death toll of the dread disease climbed sharply in Hawaii, more than 10 per cent., and slightly in the United States, seven per cent. In Oregon, 36.5 persons per 100,000 population died from tuberculosis in 1936 as compared to 36.4 in 1935. Tuberculosis still holds the deadly distinction as the leading cause of death to all persons dying between the ages of 20 and 40 years.

Speaking for the annual Christmas seal sale, Louis G. Clarke, president of the Oregon Tuberculosis Association, pointed out that while other diseases cause more deaths "these statistically more important causes operate primarily in ages of life which are not crucial to the structure or well-being of society."
