

Increase in Income of Farms Due if Trends Continue

Oregon farm income for 1939, as that of the country as a whole, may be moderately larger than in 1938 if present trends continue as analyzed by agricultural economists. This is the word brought back from Washington D. C., by L. R. Breithaupt, extension agriculturist economist at Oregon State college, who represented the extension service at the annual agricultural outlook conference.

A brief summary of the agricultural outlook for Oregon is contained in the current issue of "Agricultural Situation and Outlook" just published and distributed to various extension offices throughout the state. More detailed discussion of the outlook as applied to individual enterprises will be included in later issues throughout the year as usual. The more favorable outlook for farm income in Oregon is dependent upon maintenance of normal gross volume farm production and a strengthening of consumer purchasing power as is predicted by the bureau of agricultural economics. Farm production expenses are expected to average about the same as in 1938.

The outlook is relatively more favorable for farm families producing crops that reach the consumer without long storage, except where such quickly used crops are increased greatly in volume or where they have experienced prices in 1938 raised by government action.
