News of the Theatre

MERELY A BROKEN NECK

Tom Brown can tell you of the discomforts of having a broken neck although he has never suffered such a misfortune in real life. Brown appeared in "The Duke of West Point," now being released through United Artists at the Joy Theatre. The script required that his neck be broken in a practice game of ice hockey.

Brown didn't mind the heavy fall on the ice, which was plenty realistic. But he was quite uncomfortable when he faced the neck brace which Director Alfred Green told him he would have to wear in ensuing hospital room scenes.

Early next morning a doctor was summoned and the brace placed on Brown's neck. He then had to lie in bed for eight hours, going through scenes with other players in the picture. After the ordeal, his neck was so stiff he could hardly move it and had to call a masseur before he felt in shape for the next day's work.

BROAD ARROWS

Instead of the horizontal stripes, still signifying prison inmates in various United States penal institutions, the British mark the clothing of their prisoners with the broad arrow. This consists of three wedge-shaped designs, their points downward, placed at intervals over the trousers and coats of the men. Brian Aherne and Victor McLaglen, the stars of Hal Roach's "Captain Fury," a thrilling drama of the colonization of early Australia, starting a run at the Joy Theatre on Sunday, as well as other members of the cast, appeared in gray dotted clothing with this distinguishing feature, in the early scenes of the picture.

KIDS GET ROLES

Twenty-five youngsters, ranging in age from six to twelve, anticipated the time of their lives when they received a call from the Hal Roach studios to "play around" on location for one of the sequences of "Zenobia," the romantic comedy showing at the Joy Theatre through United Artists release.

First shadow of apprehension came with their visit to the wardrobe department. Here they were toggled out in the most extraordinary play suits they had ever seen. The boys donned tight-fitting long trousers, shirts with ruffles, wind-jackets and crowning the odd ensemble were round hats with streamers on them or caps that had strings and tassels hanging from the peaks. The girls were assigned hoop-skirt dresses.

JACK HOLT STARS IN NEW SPY FILM

Jack Holt's latest and most excitingly dramatic starring vehicle, Columbia's "Trapped in the Sky," opens Tuesday at the Joy Theatre. The film is based upon a sensational aerial invention of high military value whose plans are sought by enemy spies. Ralph Morgan, C. Henry Gordon and Katherine DeMille are featured members of the supporting cast which includes Sidney Blackmer, Ivan Labedoff, Regis Toomey and Paul Everton. Lewis D. Collins directed from a screenplay by Eric Taylor and Gordon Rigby.

CROSS SECTION OF LIFE IN STRIKING FILM DRAMA

A unique cross-section of life among eleven oddly assorted people stranded in the middle of a vast Brazilian jungle after their transport plane is forced down, is strikingly revealed in RKO Radio's dramatic film, "Five Came Back."

Chester Morris, Lucille Ball, Wendy Barrie, John Carradine, and Joseph Calleia head the strong cast. The eleven ill-fated people include a pilot, his co-pilot, a runaway heiress, a gold-digger, a private detective, a gangster, an anarchist-killer, a botanist, his wife, a millionaire and the tiny son of a murdered public enemy. Of this group, only five are enabled to return to civilization in the crippled plane. How these five are determined constitutes one of the most powerful dramatic crises ever filmed.

ANN SOTHERN GETS SOME COOKING LESSONS ON SET

Ann Sothorn can put aside all those cook books she bought immediately after starting housekeeping for the first time. She learned how to cook from an expert. Willie Fung, Chinese actor and restaurant owner, was her teacher.

The lessons revolved from Miss Sothorn's laugh when the script of her new picture, "Malaise," called for her supervising Fung's cuisine. "I should be learning from you," he said. He agreed to instruct her, so between scenes Fung taught her the intricacies of preparing Occidental and Oriental dishes, and when the picture was finished completed the course in the star's own kitchen.

Mrs. Sothorn is featured with Robert Young in "Malaise," which opens Thursday at the Joy Theatre.
