A REWARD WELL EARNED INDEED—

RECENTLY APPEARING in a bulletin issued by the United States Forest Service with headquarters at Portland was an announcement headed as follows: "Apprehenders of Incendiarist Rewarded." The statement continued under the heading as follows: "The federal government has just authorized the payment of $300 award to four Portland men who furnished evidence which led to the arrest and conviction of a forest fire incendiarist last spring."

"Charles Gosso was convicted in Judge Claude McCulloch's court, Portland, Oregon, on June 30 of felony for setting on fire or leaving the fires unattended and of misdemeanor for failing to extinguish the fires before leaving them. The sentence was two years in federal prison and 30 days in the county jail."

Little can be said in favor of the convicted party but considerable in the way of compliment can be extended to those instrumental in supplying evidence and applying punishment for the offense.

The man convicted is only one of many, it seems, who has little realization of the serious nature of destruction of the state's forest resources. Those resources cannot be expected to replenish at a pace in keeping with the speed with which they are being removed. Lumbering activities are rapid in the removal of forests under modern methods and it is vitally of interest to all to maintain standing timber as long as possible when it is not being harvested.

Reports from forestry officials in the Upper Nehalem Valley alone have been numerous in mentioning fires which have every indication of being started intentionally. It is usually possible to determine the cause of a forest fire but difficult to apprehend the offender when the deed is premeditated as is the case with incendiarists. A good deal of effort is expended in bringing to justice those who are caught under sufficient evidence.

But, consider the matter in another manner. Should not people, those who do set forest fires, be of sufficient foresight to realize that the loss of burned timber will not be replaced for many years and opportunities for livelihood will be lessened thereby.

Just a moment of thought by those who have been guilty of incendiarism would surely reveal to them the damage they were contemplating.
