News of the Theatre

GAY TRIO DRAFTED IN 'THREE SONS O'GUNS'

Wayne Morris, Tom Brown and William Orr are the three slap-happy jitterbugs who portray the title roles in Warner Bros.' fast-paced comedy, "Three Sons O' Guns."

The three fellows are cast in a new find of film treatment of conscription. It's about a trio of draft-dodgers-at-heart. Morris is trombone-happy, but suddenly decides to get a job and support his mother, incidentally becoming draft-exempt. Orr is theatre-happy, but takes time off his phoney rehearsals to get married—right after he gets his questionnaire. Brown is fun-happy, and settles right down to list every ailment he ever had.

INTERESTING STORY UNFOLDS IN FILM—

Many screenplays have been filmed, dealing with the problems of the young man who has to make his way in the world without the benefit of "influential connections."

Republic now reverses the order in "Mr. District Attorney," and presents the equally perplexing problems of the young man who gets his job through an important relative and is then forced to prove his ability and make good over the natural resentment of his co-workers who succeeded the "hard way!"

Dennis O'Keefe does just this in the leading male role of "P. Cadwallader Jones" who comes to work in the District Attorney's office, having been "recommended" by an uncle in the State House. He finds every man's hand against him, even that of Terry, the girl newspaper reporter who covers the D. A.'s office news.

LAUGHS BEGIN FOR AUDIENCES—

"Life Begins for Andy Hardy" strikes one of the most important notes ever to be introduced in these pictures, principally the problems that face a youngster upon graduation from high school. Whether to go on to college or go to work is the problem that faces Andy, as it faces so many other youngsters. Andy chose to leave home and work for a month, to thus make a clearer decision. What happens when he cuts family ties to go to New York, get a job and go out on his own, makes for one of the most gripping as well as entertaining films of the group.

'BROADWAY LIMITED' WINS TOP HONORS—

"Broadway Limited" unreels a laugh-filled, swift-paced story of the vicissitudes in the life of the great film star, April Tremaine, who is en route from the west coast to New York, accompanied by her film director and a fan magazine publicity woman. As a publicity stunt, the public is led to believe that Miss Tremaine is the mother of a baby girl. But at the time of this announcement, the baby of a socially prominent family is kidnapped, and identifying marks on Miss Tremaine's baby are similar to those of the child that has disappeared. This inevitably leads to a whole series of dramatic incidents, which are packed with suspense and surprises.

STIRRING SPY THRILLER

UNREELED IN "BLACKOUT"

"Blackout" tells an absorbing story of an attractive and alluring spy who gets to London when the Danish freighter Helvig is halted in the English channel by a British patrol ship seeking contraband. Her adventure in London, as her steps are dogged by the Captain of the Helvig, who suspects his pretty passenger, provides the film with sustained suspense and excitement, as most of the mystery unwinds in the nightly blackout over London.

GAYLY UNIQUE FILM STARS JEAN ARTHUR—

Cleverly blending a social document with farce comedy, human drama and sheer fantasy, "The Devil and Miss Jones" brings Jean Arthur to the screen in one of her most delightful roles, with Robert Cummings and Charles Coburn appearing in support.
