Waves Quota for Oregon Is Set

Oregon's share of the national quota for Waves in 1944 is 1,000 young women—which will mean that 1000 fewer breadwinner fathers with families will be required to leave for war—reported Lieutenant John F. Biehler, recruiter in charge of the Portland navy recruiting station, which handles Waves applicants in this area.

National goal for the Waves in 1944 is 45,000 enlistments at the rate of 1200 a week for the remainder of the year. At the end of 1943 the Waves had 47,600 officers and enlisted personnel, exceeding the goal set for the year. It is anticipated that by the end of 1944 there will be at least 92,400 navy women.

Men Released for Duty

By a person-to-person count, Waves have released for sea duty enough men to take 12 battle-ships to war against the enemy. In addition, thousands of other men have been enabled to go to sea because women have been assigned to new or expanding shore activities which otherwise would have been staffed by men.

Relaxation of physical requirements, plus greater use of Waves in practically every phase of navy activity has increased opportunities for young women in the Waves. Any young woman between the ages of 20 and 35 with training or aptitude in almost any civilian work is qualified for the Waves. Requirements are few: she must be in good health, be a U.S. citizen and have no children under 18 years of age.

Will Your Car Last Until the War is Over?

One positive fact is that your car has many miles to travel before it is over and even more miles before it can be replaced with a new car. Making it last will be easier if you see that the oil is changed and a greasing job done regularly.
