Use of 2 Handy Bleaches Told

Sodium perborate, sometimes sold as a tooth powder or mouth wash, and 20-volume peroxide are two handy materials to keep in the cleaning cabinet to bleach out stains, especially those caused by mildew, says Miss Lucy Lane, extension specialist in clothing and textiles at O.S.C.

Fresh mildew can be removed with good soap suds followed by thorough sunning, but old mildew stain is one of the hardest to remove. If the material is white, bleaching agents including a mixture of lemon and salt may be used.

Two of the Safest
"Sodium perborate and 20-volume peroxide are two of the safest bleaches for all types of materials," Miss Lane explains. "The sodium perborate treatment must be rapid, followed by thorough rinsing or the bleach will affect the color."

"For small, fresh stains, sponge with a liquid made up of four tablespoons of perborate to a pint of soapy water. Another way is to stretch the stained cloth over a bowl of hot water, dampen the stain and then dust the powdered sodium perborate on it. Let stand for a few minutes, then rinse well. For a large stain soak the entire article for a half hour or longer in the solution."

Peroxide Easy on Color
The 20-volume peroxide, which is stronger than the medicinal variety, is also a safe bleach for all fibers and is not as hard on color as chloride bleaches. It may be applied full strength or diluted, depending on the fragility of the fabric. The action is speeded if a few drops of ammonia are added just before use. The perborate and peroxide may be combined successfully.
