Adequate Wiring in Home: Key to Electrical Efficiency

HOME MAKERS interested in getting the most for every dollar spent on electricity, whether for current, lamps, small appliances or larger pieces of electrical equipment, are urged to investigate a too-frequently neglected but vital matter—wiring. Vital, according to electrical engineers, whether you plan to build a new home or simply renovate the present one, because a wiring system designed for future as well as present needs keeps the home modern electrically, pays dividends in actual cash savings, in convenience, comfort and pleasure.

The wiring in most homes today, these specialists emphasize, is so hopelessly inadequate that a voltage drop in excess of 10 per cent is common, and they cite typical examples of what this means in efficiency and economy.

A toaster plugged into a wiring system having a 10 per cent fade-out takes 31.5 per cent more time to brown a piece of toast and consumes 28.5 per cent more current than when plugged into an adequate system.

Inadequate wiring chokes off a lot of electricity before it reaches appliances.

Prime reason for the sad state of wiring, the engineers explain, is that 65 per cent of America's homes were built before 1926 when few appliances were in service. Homes were wired for lights only and the possible use of an occasional low-wattage appliance. Today many more appliances not only are in use, but here's an additional need with a minimum of effort, the engineers recommend a simple, non-technical booklet, "The Handbook of Residential Wiring Design", containing diagrams for every room, with suggestions for outlet locations and types of circuits. It is suggested, too, as a guide when you explain to the builder or electrical contractor what you want in electrical service. A copy may be obtained at cost by sending 25 cents to Industry Committee on Interior Wiring Design, Room 2650, 420 Lexington Ave., N. Y. 17, N. Y.
