Loss Minor in Oregon Harvest

Oregon farmers succeeded in harvesting a record volume of crops last year with comparatively little loss caused by labor shortages, according to a year end summary of the activities of the O.S.C. Extension service farm labor work just issued by J. R. Beck, state supervisor. The federal estimate of 4,658,000 tons of field crops, exclusive of animal products, constitutes a new high for the state, 7 per cent above 1945 and 5 per cent above the previous records in 1943.

With the elimination of large wartime labor groups such as German prisoners of war and Mexican nationals, continued success this year will depend to a great extent on farmers providing housing either on the farm or in community labor camps, Beck believes. Major effort of the farm labor services throughout the west will be in recruiting and directing transient help from state to state and within the states to provide them with ample work and farmers with adequate labor at the peak seasons.

Last year 15,739 different farms, or more than 25 per cent of the state's total, obtained workers through farm labor service. Total placements reached 186,912 for the year despite far fewer Mexicans and prisoners of war as compared with recent years.

Of the total placements, 26,983 were of women and 51,629 of youth. These averaged about three placements per individual, Beck explained. The balance, made up of men, included 7483 placements of veterans.

A survey of out-of-state migrant workers last year revealed workers in Oregon from 36 different states. An estimated 15,000 total helped with Oregon's various harvests such as berry, tree fruits, vegetables, hops, potatoes and nuts. Only 2550 Mexican nationals were used and only 750 P.O.W.'s for six weeks in the Malheur beet fields early in the season.
