MINNEAPOLIS — For the first time in many months there is a marked decrease in consumer purchasing power, it is revealed today in the monthly survey of "real income" made by Investors Syndicate, nation-wide investment company.

Although the income of the average family today is $1.18 for every dollar earned a year ago, prices have gone up to $1.23 for every dollar in April, 1946. This reduces the "real income" index to 96 cents. "Real income" is the relationship of income to living costs.

Although there have been fluctuations in "real income" at times during the past six years, this sharp break from the "real income" level of $1.02 a month earlier and a level of $1.06 four months ago indicates a major falling off in purchasing power, Investors Syndicate said.

All types of income and all phases of the price structure have increased over a year ago, the survey shows. Wages are up to $1.22 for each $1 a year ago, salaries are up to $1.20, investment income to $1.07 and other income — principally farmers' — to $1.14. The price of food is now $1.33 for each $1 a year ago, shelter is up to $1.03, clothing to $1.19, and miscellaneous costs to $1.35.

This break in purchasing power, Investors Syndicate said, seems to indicate that advancing prices are reducing the ability of the consumer to buy, and threaten to affect the industrial index soon.
