Economic Balance Improves; Buying Power Increasing

PURCHASING POWER

MINNEAPOLIS — Purchasing power of the average American family continues to be higher than a year ago, and indications are that it will remain high. This is revealed in the monthly Investors Syndicate survey of "real income," which is the relationship between revenue and living costs.

The next break in the price structure is more likely to come in clothing than in food, the survey reports. Clothing prices already are "soft," showing the lowest increase over last year of any major factor in the cost structure.

While the average family's bills come to $1.11 for every dollar they cost a year ago, its income is up to $1.14 for every dollar, making the "real income" index 1.03.

Another wholesome sign, the Investors Syndicate report shows, is the balancing of various types of income. Salaries are going up a bit faster than wages and farm income, finally enabling the white-collar workers to hold their own in the price spiral. Investment income also is increasing slightly faster than the average of all income, after months of being behind wages and farm income.

"The predictions of pessimists a few months ago, that a recession was inevitable, are being proved unsound," said E. E. Crabb, chairman and president of Investors Syndicate, a leading distributor of investment certificates. "There is constant evidence that the economic factors are being brought into better balance. This is a sign of progress toward true economic stability."
