Who in Heaven?

BY GEO. N. TAYLOR
Portland, Oregon

Heaven will see many who lived before Christ. These are such as had faith to obey God. They took a lamb from the flock. Then they drew the knife. The innocent blood flowed and this they put on the altar. Now hear God — "I have given you the blood upon the altar to make a covering for your souls. Lv. 17:11 — Bible.

Centuries Pass—Then at length came Christ and you hear John the Baptist shout — "Behold the Lamb of God that takes away the sin of the world — John 1:29. Yes, Christ's blood washed away the sins of God's people of old. And His blood washes away your sins also if you have faith, for — "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanses from all sin—1 John 1:7. But you must lay hold on Christ's blood as blotting out all your sins. God is calling. What is your answer?

OUT OF THE WOODS . . .

Mr. Wilson's Wood

The traditional call, "Tim-buh-r-r-r!" is heard again in the Pentagon, it echoes through the Office of Defense Mobilization, and Boss Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson relays it on to the woods.

There are the big planes. Boeing—a name in the airways like that of Bunyan on the timber trails. Mighty angels of death for any foe, anywhere. Metal flying machines, but they want wood as never before.

On an average day as much as 800,000 board feet of Douglas fir—enough to build 80 five-room homes—is in the storage yards of the Boeing Airplane Company, Seattle. It is used to make crates and boxes for the shipping of plane parts to world-wide bases. No substitute for the wood railroad tie has been found, and by the same token there's nothing to take the place of wood for a rugged crating job. Some plane crates are big enough for house-keeping in Dogpatch.

Boeing's Mr. Chips

Boeing, like other giants of American war plane production, imports immense amounts of rare foreign woods for special purposes.

"Around 20 years ago, when the company began to make all-metal planes, I figured the best thing I could do was to join the Navy and learn to be a metal-smith," says Bert Pearce, Boeing's lumber control supervisor. "But wood was still wanted. Today Boeing's Seattle division alone is using more timber than we did when planes were made entirely of wood and fabric. So I'm still Boeing's Mr. Chips!"

A trip around the yard with Bert Pearce shows a wonderful variety of airplane woods. Each has its own special qualities and particular values for use. Sitka spruce, of course, is valued highly as it was in World War I as airplane lumber of uniform strength with lightness and workability.

Balsa is the wood that amazes. A lumber-handler can walk with a 4x10" balsa plank ten feet long held high in each hand. It is stronger than cork and just as good as a vibration dampener.

Boeing's Mr. Chips scouts for airplane spruce not only on our West Coast but on the Queen Charlottes and in Southeastern Alaska. It goes mostly into mock-up work and into fittings which metal has never been able to replace.

West Coast hemlock, ranked as an airplane wood in World War II, has a corner in the Boeing yard. Alder, larch, white pine, the Port Orford and the Alaskan cedars, walnut, oak, poplar, birch, are there, and even magnolia is there, in thick timbers, in thin veneers. There is much eastern maple.

There is a plank of Honduras mahogany that cost $107 wholesale. It goes into the making of patterns and models which have hard use.

Lignum vitae from South America is called for when there's need for a bearing to do a job under water and be lubricated by water. Philippine mahogany and Western red cedar are tagged as insulating woods. Much of these species went into construction of the Boeing cold-test laboratory.

Bert Pearce is a teak man. "A wonderful wood," he declares. "As hard and strong as any wood has right to be, and with a natural oil that preserves it."

Teak is logged in Burma and Siam by elephants and it is worth just about its weight in gold when it gets to Seattle. It crowns Boeing's wonderful woodpile. But the bulk of it, and Mr. Wilson's main concern, remains our own Douglas fir.

Home economics authorities often say "too many women never have time to save time."

GEMS OF THOUGHT

HONESTY

I hope I shall always possess firmness and virtue enough to maintain what I consider the most enviable of all titles, the character of an "Honest Man."

George Washington

Fear of punishment never made man truly honest. Moral courage is requisite to meet the wrong and to proclaim the right.

—Mary Eddy Baker

Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any praise, think on these things.

—Philippians

There is no terror in your threats; for I am armed so strong in honesty that they pass me by as the idle wind —Shakespeare

We must make the world honest before we can honestly say to our children that honesty is the best policy.

—Bernard Shaw
