

LET'S GO FISHING . . .

Vacation time is here and everywhere people are planning for a vacation, some for excursions to far places, others with a hamper for a picnic lunch in some pleasant spot beside a wooded stream. With all the idea is the same — to get away from the humdrum of everyday life, to get back to nature and take stock of themselves.

When one thinks of a vacation he invariably conjures up visions of mountains, forests, streams, of waves breaking on the ocean beaches or of placid lakes with a tent and a campfire burning on the shore. It is the urge, the yearning that is in the heart of all of us, young and old alike, to get back to nature. It is the primal call of ancient man when, in ages past, he fought for survival.

We, who are so fortunate as to live here in Vernonia where nature's lavish favors are so close at hand, do not realize the longing for a change, the need for a vacation by the denizens of the big cities. For nearly a year they have been shut up within walls, listening to the chatter of typewriters, the endless roar of traffic, breathing the foul, smokey air laden with the gaseous fumes from the exhausts of motor vehicles.

These are the people who need a vacation, who must have a change, a period of relaxation if they are to carry on. The human body, the almost perfect mechanism that it is, cannot go on indefinitely without a rest, a chance to recuperate. Our Lord realized this when He set aside the sabbath as a day of rest and Lent is a vacation of sorts where one takes stock of his spiritual needs.

There is no better way to spend a vacation than to go fishing. Our Lord, Himself has given it His approval for He used to go on fishing trips with His Apostles. But one does not have to spend all his time in just catching fish—that is just a side-line. Hunt up a likely hole with a grassy bank and green boughs overhead where one can lean back against the trunk of a tree and day-dream. Just let your thoughts drift away. You will marvel to what far places they will go, what secrets they may reveal in the dim, mysterious yonder.
