

Work of Artist to Be Displayed

Jimmie James, whose paintings will be on exhibition at Pete Brunson's Emporium July 31, is an unusually gifted person. Not only is he the outstanding crayon painter of his time, but he is an able writer, a scientist, naturalist and an authority on marine zoology.

When the submarine gardens were first installed at Depoe Bay, Jimmie James went down in a diving suit and collected the sea anemones, sea urchins and other sea plants for the aquatic gardens. To anyone who has seen those aquatic garden at Depoe Bay, they look like beautiful, underwater flowers, but in fact they are all living marine animal life and feed on small fish and other aquatic life.

Mr. James was with the U.S. Forestry Service for several years. For some time he was stationed in New Mexico and there he became interested in the hieroglyphs of the Pueblo Indians and the primitive drawing on the walls of the caves from which he later drew many of his inspirations. He was well liked by the Navaho Indians who named him "Taha-hato" (has no hat) from his habit of going bare-headed.

For two years he was stationed in Utah. While there he wrote a series of articles on nature subjects and animal life in the high places for the Salt Lake Tribune. The publishers were so well pleased with his stories that they asked him to join their regular staff.

For some time Jimmie James was in the restaurant business and established The Pine Cone Cafe at the west entrance of Yellowstone park. The walls were adorned with elk antlers, the horns of Texas longhorn steers, old oxbows, wagon wheels, flintlock muskets, tomahawks and other trophies of the Old West.

At one time Bill Hart and Will Rogers were both on location near there making a picture. "The Pine Cone" soon became a favorite rendezvous of Hollywood celebrities. Will Rogers was especially fond of a certain western stew that Jimmie James served. He introduced Bill Hart to it and both became regular patrons. No phony, dude cowboys there two; they were real, down-to-earth men and knew their West. One day they got into a heated argument about the characteristics of a coyote — whether he ran with his feet all together like a jackrabbit, or singly, like a running horse. Jimmie James was called in to arbitrate. Bill Hart was a big man and Jimmie did not want to offend him. He also knew what Will could do with that snakey, educated lariat of his. Jimmie was definitely on the spot and took the only way out he knew; he hastily drew a sketch of a coyote in full flight and left those two worthies to figure out for themselves.
