

Traffic Death Toll Lowered

Early estimates of Oregon's 1951 traffic death toll proved in error when a later count turned up 428 fatalities rather than the 440 anticipated by a preliminary check January 1.

Officials said December mishaps upset their calculations by producing 25 deaths, far fewer than they had reason to hope. The year's trend had led to expectations of from 35 to 40 fatalities in the final month.

The unexpected fatality decline in December, which the state's motorists and pedestrians achieved in the face of the year-end holiday hazards and winter weather conditions, brought the 1951 death count exactly even with the final total of 428 recorded in 1950. Hopes for a reduction were abandoned late in the year when monthly increases in fatal accidents failed to taper off.

While the state held the line in number of traffic deaths, vehicle travel increased an estimated 350 million miles over total travel of the year before, according to gasoline sales figures reported to Secretary of State Earl T. Newbry.

The gain in travel resulted in a slightly lowered mileage death rate, Newbry pointed out. Fatalities in each 100 million miles of total street and highway travel reached 6.7 as compared with an even 7.0 in 1950.

Understanding Needed to Work with Youth, Specialist Tells Leaders

"It takes a great deal of understanding on the part of parents and leaders when working with boys and girls," stated Thomas Poffenberger, family life specialist, Oregon State College, in talking to 4-H club leaders at their county leaders association meeting on January 19. The meeting was held at the St. Helens high school.

He explained how boys and girls develop differently emotionally, physically, intellectually and in manual ability. He emphasized the fact that they need love and a sense of security in the home. As they get older they need recognition; this helps in developing self worth.

Mrs. W. H. Berkey, Portland, gave an interesting account of her trip to 4-H club congress at Chicago in November last year. She strongly recommended that club members be encouraged to keep all their 4-H records. These will be useful even if the club members don't enter any special contests, she said. Mrs. Berkey also encouraged leaders to keep records of their clubs and club activities.

During the business meeting in the morning, plans were made for the 4-H and FFA building, to be constructed at the county fairgrounds this spring. Various groups throughout the county will be contacted soon for support.

A report on the building showed $740 now on hand for the building and a large quantity of lumber already at the fairgrounds. The pouring of a concrete floor will be handled by the fair board.

It was decided not to have a 4-H camp in 1952 in view of the increased work involved with the building of the dormitory. The 4-H clubs will continue their interest in the development of Camp Wilkerson, however.

An explanation of the International Farm Youth Exchange program was given by Marjorie Hurula, Clatskanie. Marjorie, a 4-H club member, has been named Columbia county chairman of the IFYE program. She will head the county drive to obtain funds to help send students from Oregon to live in foreign countries for a period of three months. This program is being sponsored by 4-H clubs throughout the
