OUT OF THE WOODS . . .

Royal Regulation . . .

A fighting Irishman, Col. David Dunbar, was ordered over to the American Colonies in 1727 by England's King George I, with the title of Surveyor General and the duty of enforcing a new law on timber cutting in Massachusetts.

The law harked back to October 7, 1690, forbidding the felling of trees above two feet thick on all Massachusetts land that had been granted since that date. The big trees were to be kept in reserve for his nibs, German George.

The new royal regulations took in, of course, the noblest white pine forests of them all, for wooded Maine was yet a district of Massachusetts. The business of the royal bull of the woods, Dirty Dave Dunbar, (as some called him), was to enforce observance of the "broad arrow" brand on standing pines, which the colonists had been resisting for nigh on a hundred years.

No time Dirty Dave was in hotter water than any Federal Prohibition sleuth of the 1920s or OPS agent of our time ever had to endure. The Surveyor General was a past fort commander, and then as now an army fort was the spot to find government regulations at their worst. Probably the land that is now the U. S. A. has never known a more bullheaded bureaucrat than Dave Dunbar. He began to shove the colonists around and it disturbed them.

Swamp Law . . .

The colonists of the backwoods had a law of their own, and "swamp law" they called it. Government Woods Boss Dunbar collided with it when he sent deputies on a ship to Exter (N. H.) to confiscate lumber that had been cut in part from broad arrow brand pines.

The agents of King George I and his surveyor general relaxed in an Exter tavern, after anchoring in the eventide. They were amazed, and then beguiled, by lavish hospitality. Staggering forth at last, they were attacked by a horde of "Indians", who beat the tar out of them with green elm clubs all the way to the water.

Tattered and bloody, stained with elm sap, the government men took their boats and rowed for their ship. There they found the rigging and sails cut down and a hole chopped in the ship's bottom. The agents, sober and even more scared by this time, piled into their boats again, made shore hid in the woods, then toiled afoot back to Portsmouth, looking out sharply for more "Indians".

City, County Men To Ask Questions

A meeting of all city and county civil defense directors in Oregon will be held Wednesday, October 29 at the Capitol building in Salem, it was announced by Robert Sandstrom, administrative coordinator for the state civil defense agency.

The statewide meeting, second one of its type, will be devoted principally to a question-and-answer period for local directors.

During the morning session, there will be discussions on the federal match money program; volunteer registration campaign, scheduled November 11-27; and legislative proposals.

Service chiefs from the state civil defense office will have personnel from the following services at the meeting to answer questions: Fire, police, medical, welfare, communications, transportation, engineering and heavy rescue, utilities, aviation, and supply.

Mrs. W. B. Ortner, who recently underwent an operation at St. Vincent's hospital, Portland, is recovering satisfactorily.

Mrs. Margaret Thoreau and two small children are here visiting at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Anderson. They returned recently with her parents when they came home from a short vacation at Pebbles Beach, California.

Against Arrow and Stamp

The story has vastly more to it than can ever be touched on this space. Back of it was a long political and legal conflict between representatives of the colonists, led by Elisha Cook, Jr., and the authority of the Crown in Massachusetts as represented by the former surveyor general, John Bridger, and Governor Samuel Shute.

The colonists' cause was a respectable one and the laws that developed about it were much more than the "swamp" law of the squatters. The fight against the woods was really the birth of the American private enterprise system in opposition to dominating bureaucracy that ruled arbitrarily by remote control.

Resistance grew steadily against government regulation of forest use, rising in the southern colonies against royal restrictions on the growing of naval stores. In time there were authorities who described enforcement of the broad arrow as a more powerful influence than that of the Stamp Act in bringing about the American Revolution.

Autumn Ideal Time To Kill Rats, Mice

The first cool autumn days should be your reminder to prepare for the invasion of rats and mice. Farms are especially susceptible, but protection should be provided in other places, too—homes, summer cottages and business places.

An effective anti-rat and mouse campaign, according to many pest control specialists, includes these three steps:

One—Remedy poor sanitation.

Two—Ratproof buildings, when practical.

Three—Place rat bait according to directions.

To assure good sanitation, remove all rubbish piles, and stack lumber and firewood neatly on racks at least one foot above ground level.

Ratproofing, Step No. 2, can effectively keep rats and mice out of corn cribs, granaries, warehouses, and all other places where feed is available. Bulletins describing ratproofing methods may be obtained from your county agricultural agent.

Baiting is the third and most effective blow in the autumn anti-rat campaign. Outstanding among the available rat and mouse killers is warfarin, a potent substance discovered in the laboratories of Dr. Karl Paul Link, Biochemistry Dept., University of Wisconsin, by Drs. Mark A. Stahmann, Miyoshi Ikawa, and Link.

Warfarin bait is recommended because: It kills all species of rats and mice common to the United States; it is a slow killer and does not create bait shyness; no pre-baiting is required; no tolerance develops; it is easy to use; it may be used in any climate or season at any temperature; it is comparatively safe to use; and it may be purchased as a concentrate or a ready-mixed bait.

In using warfarin bait, it must be made available to the rats and mice at all times. Bait stations—shallow containers protected with a board or a wooden box—are normally examined and replenished every 48 hours. A limited number of permanent bait stations will kill newcomers and control reinvasion.
