Two-State Fire Record Lowest Since Records of Losses Kept

Private and state forest fire protection men throughout Washington and Oregon are rubbing their rabbit feet for luck.

Not since man has kept records of forest fire losses have these two states had such a remarkably low acreage burned by forest fires. Unusual is the fact that lightning fires almost equal man-caused blazes. Generally man-caused fires run nine to one over lightning.

In Oregon, through the end of August, losses on state and private lands were 803 acres from 247 man-caused and 259 lightning fires.

In Washington only 740 acres had been burned through August, from 652 fires, forty per cent of these being lightning fires. A fire in Clark County in mid-September took almost 100 acres, which will raise that figure.

Losses on U. S. Forest Service land in the two-state region through August 31 totaled 720 acres from 773 fires, only 115 man-caused.

"The big danger," says Roy F. Morse, chairman of the Industrial Forestry Association, "is that the people might get too self-confident and too smug. That's when we always have our worst fires, when people get careless."

The forest leader urged continuance of simple precautionary measures. He listed them in this order:

1. Use your ash tray if you must smoke when travelling.
2. Be sure you build campfires in a safe place away from hazards.

He was taken to a hospital in Portland the first of the week.
