Social Security

Are farm earnings covered under the Social Security Act? According to Ev. Cummins, social security field representative, many Columbia county farm operators and farm workers are asking how they stand with social security. And here is the answer supplied by Cummins.

"Earnings from the ownership or operation of a farm are not covered under Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance system. No credit can be earned toward old-age benefits or survivors benefits from farm earnings. This is true even though most self-employed people, for example grocers, builders and service station operators, have been covered under the act since 1951. Farm operators and certain professional groups were not included under social security."

"Although the farm owner is not covered under the act some farm workers have been earning social security coverage since 1951; but only those considered regularly employed. And the act is quite definite, as to which farm workers are considered 'regularly employed.' The second full calendar quarter of work for one employer usually counts toward social security credit.

For example Harold starts to work on Bill's farm on May 1st. May and June work doesn't count at all. July, August and September work, the first full calendar quarter, qualifies Harold for coverages during the next quarter. If Harold keeps working for Bill for sixty days in the October, November, December quarter and is paid $50.00 in cash wages, Harold earns his first quarter of social security coverage. In January any Bill, the farm owner, mails a report to the Director of Internal Revenue and pays the 4 per cent social security contribution. The employer and the employee each pay 2 per cent. As long as Harold keeps doing agricultural work for the same employer and meeting the sixty-day $50.00 test his cash wages will be covered under the social security act."

According to Cummins, many of the monthly benefit payments now being made to Columbia County children and old folks are based on the social security coverage earned in whole or in part from regular farm work.

Cummins invites all those wanting more information about farm coverage under the social security act or other information about rights and benefits under the Social Security Act, to contact him on one of his regular weekly visits to St. Helens.
