Hoboes Gather Friday the 13th

If you heard tales of queer goings on about town last Friday night, just remember it was Friday the thirteenth! And, if your children came home with tales of poor old hoboes about town with no place to sleep and nothing to eat, again just remember it was Friday the thirteenth. And, what better time could there be for the hoboes to gather for a bonfire over which hung a kettle of mulligan stew? If you contributed a spud, rest assured it was very much enjoyed.

Members of the Past Chiefs club who became hoboes for a night gathered around a bonfire in the Milton Lamping yard for an evening of hilarity . All present report the life of the open road was fun—well for one evening, anyway!

Sauvies Island Hunt Rules Set

Recent regulations issued from the Oregon State Game Commission state that Sauvie and Government Islands will be closed to crow and racoon hunting during the month of August.

At the present time, the water is so high that most of the desirable racoon hunting areas are flooded, and crows have shown no indication of bunching or formflight patterns that provide good hunting. It is anticipated that both types of hunting will be authorized in September.

On Sauvie Island, however, dog training is now being permitted on that part of the Oak Island tract inside the Sauvie Island drainage district dike, and the entire area with the exception of the safety zone around the Oak Island farmstead is open to fishing.

All the gates on the island are locked with the exception of the Oak Island road gate which remains open. It is possible to drive the length of Oak Island by being careful and avoiding the low muddy areas, and it is expected that by the middle of the month the Steelman and Rentenaar gates will be open.

Galvanized Roofing Needs Paint Protection Jobs

Rust-speckled roofing and siding of galvanized iron sheeting is a warning that the time has come for a paint protection job, and such jobs are best done during dry weather.

Just as zinc in the form of galvanizing is by far the best protective metallic coating for the rust-proofing of iron and steel, so is zinc dust paint the best material for resurfacing a galvanized sheet, according to county agent, Don Coin Walrod.

Such zinc dust paints are manufactured by many paint makers. It is often packaged in a two-compartment container for on-the-job mixing. The unused portions of tht zinc dust and the binder will stay in good condition in storage almost indefinitely.

Thoroughly cleaning all rust scale on surfaces to be painted is important so that the paint can get a firm grip on he base metal. A stiff wire brush is an efftetive tool for this purpose, says Walrod.

To be sure that the metallic zinc particles and the binder stay thoroughly mixed, experienced painters apply the paint from a small can only one-fourth filled. By dipping the brush to the bottom of the can, they keep the paint consistency throughout the job.

Potato Blight Appears Now

Spray or dust control measures for late blight fungus are due now on most potato patches if the owner is to be assured of a crop. Some fields or potato patches have already been affected with late blight, indicates Don Coin Walrod, county extension agent.

Late blight, so called because it generally attacks plants at the blossoming stage or afterwards, may first appear as pale-green irregular spots. The spots rapidly increase in size and the centers die and turn brown or black. The stems generally become affected and the entire vine may be killed and blackened in just a few days. Humid conditions speed the spread of the disease.

Tubers from infected fields become infected with the disease organism and they will not keep. The disease spreads from the surface of the potato through the flesh like the diffusion of a brown stain. At first the tissue will be dry and firm, but soft rots usually follow and destroy the tuber.

Control of blight can be achieved by applying one of several fungicides as a protective measure to keep the disease from gaining a foothold. Of the recommended materials, Dithane and Parzate are good because they do not cause extensive foliage damage. Either material is used at the rate of two pounds in 100 gallons of water. Bordeaux spray of 10-5-100 formula is very good, but is more difficult to use because of the need for mixing. The Bordeaux spray would be particularly effective for late season applications. If it is desirable to use a dust, any of the copper dusting materials containing 5 to 7 per cent copper, applied at the rate of 25 pounds per acre are satisfactory.

If srays are applied now a two week interval before the next application will probably be sufficient in most cases. As fall weather approaches weekly applications are advisable.

To build and equip the average schoolroom costs $38,000.
