a True-Life Story of
HOW YOUR TELEPHONE HELPS GET THINGS DONE

The publisher of one of the fine weekly newspapers in the area served by the West Coast Telephone Company needed a linotype operator not long ago. How he obtained a new employee, and how his telephone helped solve this problem, becomes an interesting story.

First, this newspaper man picked up his telephone and called long-distance to a larger city not far away, and placed a classified "help wanted" ad in the daily paper there.

One of the persons who read this ad had a friend whose husband happened to be a linotype operator. So she picked up her telephone and called her friend to tell her about this employment possibility.

This woman's husband was seeking work in a Mid-West city at the time, so his wife placed a long-distance telephone call to him to tell him about the ad.

So the husband, in turn, telephoned long distance to the newspaper publisher, and with his telephone interview, he got the job.

Once again, as happens over and over again, day after day, the telephone helped solve a problem that otherwise might have been impossible.
