Standard tries a flood of fire to make worn out oil fields produce again

Fire flooding produces heat and pressure to boil out previously unrecoverable oil, driving it underground to nearby producing wells.

MANY INACTIVE WELLS STILL HAVE LOTS OF OIL left underground in spite of the industry's great advances in oil recovery. Our country must have this oil to meet the growing power requirements of industry, the Armed Forces and motorists. That's why Standard is trying a new conservation experiment called "fire flooding."

We ignite some of the oil in a pool... control burning by regulating the air supply. Heat and pressure drive the oil to surrounding wells for pumping. It will take more than a year's time and a million dollars to see if fire flooding works. We think it's worth the effort because it could add more to U.S. underground oil reserves than the discovery of an entire new oil field.

Progress in the West means...
Helping find new sources to supply the oil U.S. will need in 1966

1956	1966
8,827,000	13,000,000
barrels per day	barrels per day

Standard's petroleum engineers say, "Back in 1925 the industry could predict only about 20% recovery from a new field. Modern secondary recovery methods, of which fire flooding is one of the latest, could more than double recovery."
