

GEMS OF THOUGHT
MUSIC

Music is divine. Mind, not matter, makes music; and if the divine tone be lacking, the human tone has no melody for me.

—Mary Baker Eddy

All music is what awakes from you when you are reminded by the instruments.

—Walt Whitman

The fine drama or the fine piece of music does not make its auditor part of a crowd; it removes him, and every one else in the crowd, and makes him an individual.

—George Jean Nathan

There is no truer truth obtainable by man than comes of music.

—Robert Browning

Music is the fourth great material want of our nature,—first food, then raiment, then shelter, then music.

—Bovee

Music in the best sense, does not require novelty; nay, the older it is, and the more we are accustomed to it, the greater its effect.

—Goethe

One Of Christ's Parables

GEORGE N. TAYLOR
Portland, Oregon

A man had a fig tree in his garden and at the season, he came looking for figs and found none. So he told the gardener to cut the tree down. But the gardener would first dig around the tree and add fertilizer. Then if no figs, he would cut down the tree. Luke 13:6-9. In this parable, the non-bearing tree stands for the Christian who is a mere make-believe. He acts like a Christian but he does not believe in Christ as his Lord and Saviour. Now as to the saved — they believe that Christ's blood washed away their every list sin and that God gave them eternal life. Which kind are you?

THE ALASKA FLEABANE...

ALASKA FLEABANE
© 1953 National Wildlife Federation

Possibly the Alaska Fleabane is better known to amateur botanists as the Large Mountain Fleabane. At any rate it is so listed in that most popular amateur botanist's handbook Armstrong's "Western Wildflowers." Its reported range is from Alaska south to the high alpine valleys of California and New Mexico and while it is reported to be particularly conspicuous in the Canadian Rockies it is not listed in the National Park Service's "Plants of Rock Mountain National Park." While it is reported as being abundant, growing in moist places in the higher mountains as far east as Colorado, it is not listed as an important plant or even as existing in the Forest Service's "Range Plant Handbook." Jepson's "Flora of Western Middle California" does not list it at all.

The Alaska Fleabane, if we may call it by that name, grows to a height of two feet. The leaves have bristle points and are either smooth or somewhat hairy. The upper leaves at least have somewhat clasping basis and leaf margins that are free from notching. The leaves are placed alternately along the stems which are definitely covered with a down.

The flower clusters are more or less daisy-like and composed of discs of bright yellow tubular flowers surrounded by the ray flowers which are a clear bright lilac color and not so narrow as one might expect of the usual fleabane. To most persons, the fleabanes are daisy-like slender plants with the white ray flowers that are more or less uniformly wide throughout their length. The average Eastern farmer or Midwesterner who knows "White-weed" or "Daisy Fleabane" or "Whiteweed" knows a relative of the Alaska Fleabane, though the name "White-weed" may be also appropriately applied to a member of the mustard family of plants. The "Daisy Fleabane" or "Whiteweed" may under some circumstances cause an irritation on the skins of some persons but it is not ordinarily dangerous. Wallace's Farmer once listed the Fleabane as the "worst enemy of meadows."

Our Alaska Fleabane apparently will never win a reputation as being a serious pest. It in fact is popular with many who like to range through the highlands of Western America seeking beauty and not thinking too seriously of pasture management. Horses will eat Alaska Fleabane readily but why this is so I am afraid we will have to leave to the horses whose preferences are not always easily explained. The period of flowering is the summer time when vacationists are most likely to hit the trail to the high spots. Those fortunate to come into the range of the Alaska Fleabane will probably long remember the flower tops of this plant which may measure to over an inch and a half across and whose lilac rays and brilliant yellow centers are most attractive.

The National Wildlife Federation welcomes the opportunity to invite you to the mountain tops of our West to meet this plant.

W. F. Sherman, field representative of the Social Security administration said today that a long-disabled worker now has until the beginning of July 1958 to file an application for the "disability freeze" and still have his social security earnings record protected as of the date he actually became disabled. He said also that the law now permits a veteran to receive compensation from the veterans administration for service-connected disability without any reduction in the amount of his disability insurance benefits under social security. These changes, significant to persons who have been disabled for some years and to those with service-connected disability, became effective when President Eisenhower signed P. L. 109.

The purpose of the "disability freeze" is to prevent those years during which a severe and indefinite disability keeps a person out of work from counting against him on eligibility for benefits or on the amount of his benefits. A person cannot qualify for the "freeze" unless, in addition to meeting disability requirements, he has worked for at least five years under social security and for about 1½ years during the 3-year period just before his disability began.

Until the recent change in the law, a period of disability could not be determined to have begun earlier than 12 months before application for the freeze, unless the application was made before the end of June 1957. For this reason, a disabled person who failed to make his claim before the end of June, and who had become disabled before January 1, 1955, would have lost his right to have his social security record frozen because he could not possibly meet the work requirements. Moreover, without the "freeze" he might have lost future rights to any social security benefits for himself or his family, because at the time he dies or becomes 65 he may not have the required work credit. The law, now amended, gives those who were disabled before January 1, 1955, until June 30, 1958, to file an application for the disability freeze to protect their rights to old-age, survivors, or disability insurance.

The amendment relating to disabled veterans modified the "offset" provision in the law so that a social security disability insurance benefit will not be reduced because of compensation payable to a veteran by the veterans administration for his service-connected disability. Sherman pointed out that the offset continues to apply in cases involving veterans' pensions which are paid on account of non service-connected disability.

Best Quality Paint Is Also Most Economical

Whether you paint your buildings yourself or hire it done, remember that the labor costs several times more than the price of the best quality paint, advises County Agent Don Coin Walrod. The best quality paint you can buy is usually the cheapest in the long run. It will last longer, give better service, and usually does not need to be removed or scraped when repainting, as sometimes is the case with an inferior quality paint.
