AROUND THE FARM BY DON COIN WALROD

County Extension Agent

Killing the goose that lays the golden egg is just about what folks who peel cascara trees improperly are doing.

The proper method of peeling cascara was one of the topics for discussion by members of the Columbia county farm forestry committee at a meeting last week.

In making plans for the forestry exhibit at the fair on the subject of minor forest products, committee members noted that most peeling of cascara in Columbia county is done improperly, resulting in the death of the tree and the loss of future crops.

By cutting down the cascara trees, at peeling time leaving at least a six inch stump with the bark on, new sprouts will be sent up and in a short time there will be another tree to peel. If a tree is peeled and left standing, the entire tree is killed and there will be no sprouts to replace the original tree.

To get the greatest efficiency in bark production, cascara trees should be peeled when about 5 to 6 inches in diameter. Unfortunately, most wild cascara trees are peeled at a much smaller size.

Farm woodland owners might consider the possibility of raising cascara in "plantations". This crop has a good possibility of return with present dried bark prices being quoted @18 cents. Trees are available from the state nursery just as other forest trees. A number of such plantations are in existence over the state.

Protection from theft has posed the most serious problem in connection with such an enterprise.

Ragweed control will be undertaken by the state this month in Western Oregon counties on private land under provisions of a measure passed by the last legislature. On public land such as school districts, county land, etc., the agency involved will have to take care of the weed at their own cost.

Fortunately, Columbia county has only one very small spot in the Warren area that is infested with this hay fever producing weed. On making an inspection

MAKE A NEWSPAPER STORAGE RACK

Newspaper collections can be profitable for the "young businessman" but a storage problem for the home owner. A storage rack to keep the papers neatly in place will solve the problem. Rope placed under the papers before they are stacked will make it easier to tie the bundles. The rack shown is 40 inches high, but the height can be varied so that when the rack is full it can be raised to clear the papers without hitting the ceiling.

The rack is made of 1 by 4-inch lumber. Cut square ends on all pieces. Assemble the rack with either nails or wood screws. Round all sharp edges and sand.

Materials Needed

- 4 pos. 1 x 4 in. x 8 ft. (1 pc. for each corner)
- 2 pos. 1 x 4 in. x 8 ft. (1 pc. for each frame)
- 6-penny common and finishing nails
- glue

Now Is Time for Fall Lawn Work

Lawns to be seeded this fall will be better if seedbeds are prepared now, according to County Extension Agent Don Coin Walrod. Tilling and grading the soil now and cultivating for the next three or four weeks, is important in establishing a weed-free turf in September seeded lawns.

September is an ideal month to plant lawns in much of the northwestern section of the state. By then the longest, warmest days have passed and good stands of new grass are easier to obtain.

Preparing the soil involves 3 steps prior to fall seedings. First, work down the soil to a firm, level surface. Second, keep the soil surface continuously moist for at least 3 to 4 weeks to settle the soil and ensure good weed seed germination. Third, work and rework the soil surface lightly during this period until a firm, smooth, finely worked surface has been attained and weed seedlings have been killed. Extra effort on these operations means a better lawn and less work later.

Chemical weed killers such as 2,4-D and 2,4,5-T should not be used to kill weed seedlings at this time, warns Walrod. The chemical may prevent germination and development of the grass seedlings.

The fine fescues such as chewing fescue and creeping red fescue and Astoria bentgrass are generally the most desirable turf grasses for this area. Any lawn seed mixture should contain 60 per cent or more of any one, or any combination of these grasses.

Special Care Needed For Good Dairy Heifers

Late summer is a critical time for dairy heifers, notes Don Coin Walrod, county extension agent. They are often forgotten in the rush of seasonal work. Pasture gets short. Water may be limited or stagnant. Salt is usually forgotten completely. They need protection from flies.

Heifers need not be fat, but should be kept growing normally, says the county agent.
