Highway Lifesavers Ask For Stepped-up Holiday Caution

"Peace on earth—good will on the road." That is the way Chris Nyland of the Columbia county highway lifesavers summed up the most pressing needs for a safe holiday in Oregon.

"Everyone has a moral responsibility to his neighbor to drive safely," Nyland said. "A little consideration and common sense can go a long way in preventing traffic accidents."

He pointed out that December is the month when traffic deaths and accidents usually reach their peak in Oregon, according to state officials.

"That's why we must cooperate fully in enlarging the Back the Attack on Traffic Accidents campaign," he said. The attack is being stepped up in December to arouse more people to fight holiday hazards and reduce the traffic death toll.

During this season every driver and walker should dedicate his efforts toward making the season and the year following a safe one. Our goal must be the conversion of the potential dangers inherent in the holiday season into sound, sensible safety behavior.

Each of us must accept responsibility not only for his traffic performance, but for supporting official programs necessary to keep a growing volume of traffic moving safely.

Last Christmas, Oregon recorded 192 accidents in which 69 people were injured and five were killed.

These figures are only for the immediate Christmas period. If we added all the accidents and deaths that occurred during the busy weeks preceding the actual holiday, the toll Christmas carelessness takes would be even more shocking.
