By Frank J. Laheney

QUESTION: If I take a reduced benefit, does it affect the amount of benefits for my wife and children?

ANSWER: No. A reduction in your benefit has no affect upon the benefits to your wife and children as their check will be based upon your full amount.

QUESTION: I do part-time work and have been receiving social security benefits for about two years. I try to hold my earnings to $100 a month, but my employer has been extremely busy for the past few months and has asked me to work more than usual. asked me to work more than usual. If I make over $100 in some months but limit my earnings to $1200 for the year, will I lose my checks?

ANSWER: No. If your earnings total no more than $1200 during the year, you will reecive a'l of your checks, although you may have earned over $100 in some months. Actually, under the present law you will not lose in total income (fro mearnings plus benefits that can be paid) even if you earn more than $1,200 during the year. Ask your local social security office about how you can earn more than $1,300 and have only a part of your benefits withheld.

QUESTION: One of my neighbors, age 68, tellsmethatmybenefits will be figured on my high two years. Another neighbor, age 65, tells me the high five years are used. I'm now 64, and wonder who is right?

ANSWER: Actually both your neighbors are citing their own cases correctly to you. Your benefits are determined by two factors: the year you attain age 65 (62 for women) and the amounts o fyour earnings. You will reach age 65 in 1962, so your monthly benefit will be based on your six years of highest earnings from 1950 through 1962. For more information ask your social security office for Leaflet 855.

Pat reports that being in the contest was a wonderful experience, and that she felt the judges made a fine choice in Miss Ellison.
