Bonneville Power System Notes 25th Year of Service to County

Bonneville power administration's 25th anniversary on August 20 marks a quarter century of growth and progress for Columbia county. Low cost Columbia river power has played an important part in nearly every sector of the local economy.

First power from the BPA system was delivered to Columbia county as early as 1943 through the Clatskanie PUD, from the BPA Westport substation, according to J. N. O'Neal, Portland area manager.

Today, BPA's plant investment in the county totals nearly 1 1/2 million dollars. BPA supplies all power requirements of Clatskanie PUD and West Oregon electric cooperative in addition to most of the Columbia county requirements of PP&L and PGE companies.

Monthly residential power bills in 39 cities of western Oregon have decreased about 45 percent for loads of 500 kwh during Bonneville's 25 years. In addition over 97 percent of Oregon's farms are now electrified compared to less than 40 percent 25 years ago.

Abundant low cost power has resulted in retail rates being among the lowest in the nation with farm and residential use being nearly three times the national average, O'Neal pointed out. Most sawmills, wood products manufacturing plants, food processing industries and other manufacturing operations in the county are using hydroelectric power.

Bonneville Power Administration, established by the signing of the Bonneville Act, August 20, 1937, was authorized to market the power from Bonneville dam. Today, BPA is the marketing agent for power from 20 federal multipurpose Columbia River basin projects completed or under construction.

BPA today has over 8,600 miles of high voltage transmission lines and 215 substations through which it markets over 5 million kilowatts of power at wholesale to 115 public and private utilities, industries and federal agencies in Washington, Oregon, northern Idaho and western Montana.

BPA, during its 25 years of existence, said O'Neal, has sold over 360 billion kilowatt-hours of power, returning gross power revenues to the U. S. Treasury of over $850 million. Total power delivered by BPA would supply all current needs of the city of Los Angeles for 44 years, or of the entire United States for about eight months.

BPA is still $20 million ahead of schedule in meeting all its obligations to the treasury, despite recent annual deficits. Power revenues from BPA are scheduled to repay all power's share of the cost of the U. S. Columbia river multipurpose dams in addition to giving substantial aid to irrigation projects. This amounts to about 80 percent of the total cost of these dams. BPA revenues to date have retired more than $300 million of the federal government's capital investment in the dams plus paying $295 million interest and $200 million operation and maintenance costs.
