QUESTION: A couple of years ago I stopped by the social security office in our town and they told me as long as I was earning over $2080 a year I need not apply for benefits until I was 72. My friends tell me there has been a change in this. Please explain.

ANSWER: A change last year in the social security law makes it possible for many more older people to work and still be paid some social security benefits. Under the law as it stands now, you can earn $1200 in a year and still collect all of your benefits. When you earn more than $1200 in a year, you give up $1 of benefits for every $2 you earn between $1200 and $1700. For every $1 you earn over $1700, you give up $1 of benefits. Your local social security office has a free pamphlet which shows how much you can earn and still receive some social security checks. Just ask for pamphlet 23c.

QUESTION: The other day I heard on the radio that people over 65 should visit the social security office even though they were still working. They also mentioned that each month that is delayed may mean loss of some benefits. Why do they stress not waiting a month or more?

ANSWER: The reason we stress visiting the social security office as soon as possible is that our applications are retroactive for only 12 months. In many instances we can pay benefits for all of the past 12 months before the worker applied for benefits. As you can see, if the worker delays one or more months, he would lose a full check for each month delayed.
