Reporter Notes Change in Area

Portland is becoming aware that Vernonia is something besides a ghost town, as so many wanted to believe a few years ago. The change is evident in an editorial in the Portland Reporter last Thursday, October 4.

The item characterized Vernonia as "at the end of man's creation on the SP&S spur line", which indicates they still think it is further from Portland to Vernonia than local residents think it is from Vernonia to Portland.

Evidently, the writer had been in Vernonia recently for he seemed familiar with the desolate look of the former mill site, and also with the tree farming in the area which is the life blood of the community. He also mentioned the increased school enrollment, the residents who find employment in the Portland area and the fact that the town which was expected to die when the mill left did not.

The article is the kind to stir the interest of others in coming to see what is here. And if local citizens continue to spruce up and fix up, those who come will like what they see and still more good publicity will come Vernonia's way.

Listings Due For Directory

The West Coast Telephone company's new Washington county directory, which includes listings for Banks, Beaverton, Forest Grove, Gaston, Hillsboro, Scholls, Sherwood, Stafford, Tigard, and Vernonia, is now in course of compilation, according to Jean Goodrich, division manager for the Forest Grove area.

He stated further, "The closing date for all advertisements in the yellow pages of this directory is November 1, 1962, and the closing date for the regular white pages is November 15, 1962. We urge any subscriber who contemplates any changes in his listings or advertisements to call the business office before these dates, as follows: Forest Grove, Hillsboro and Vernonia subscribers, dial 118."

"The forthcoming directory will contain many more listings and a much larger yellow classified section than the current directory," concluded Mr. Goodrich.
